A Mad World, and Tired
Full of Sound and Fury
Germany's Pied Piper
Her Republic Will Return

—By Arthur Brisbane—

THE WORLD IS PAYING for its big war in strange, serious ways. Depression, lack of money, insane gambling, bursting banks, closed banks, impoverished farmers, reckless squandering on armaments for other wars, millions of men idle, the greatest number in this "richest country," which had no business in the war. Such are a few items in our paying-for-the-war schedule.

Widespread confession of men's inability to govern themselves is another item. The will of one man, Stalin, rules 150,000,000 in Russia. Another man's will rules Turkey, another Italy, and now Hitler, imitation of Mussolini, rules with absolute power in Germany. Even in this country the dictator idea becomes fashionable. Millions believe that Congress, supposed to make laws, should step aside and let one man, President Roosevelt, do everything, on the ground that the average elected official is more or less an idiot, lazy or dishonest.

The British alone retain some confidence in their ability to govern themselves, as well as a great deal of confidence in their ability to manage others, including this bewildered nation. There are solid qualities in those British.

Hitler, yesterday, having hauled down the flag of the republic, faced a German Reichstag as servile as so many dogs, crouching to receive their food. The dictator will have full power for years to come, perhaps for life. Members of the "law-making body" are to suggest no laws unless Hitler tells them to act. He himself may frame laws as he chooses. The constitution is not to interfere with him.

Thus ends the first phase of the "German Republic." But that republic is not really dead, as Mr. Hitler will learn later.

Impoverished by war, puzzled by world-wide depression, obeying the mob instinct, strong in every primitive human being, many nations that thought themselves civilized follow mob leaders.

The French say, truly, Aux grands maux, les grands remedes. "Great evils require great remedies." And serious illness calls for disagreeable medicine. The world is taking unpleasant medicine now, but will get better.

The hatred and ingratitude that Hitler, a Fustian Mussolini, displays toward Jews are a most serious, disgraceful feature of Germany's sudden devotion to a self-appointed "pied piper." Jewish industrial, commercial and financial genius has done wonders for Germany. It has built great, sound German banks, developed Germany's commercial shipping, built up her industries. Yet a spokesman of the new regime declares, without rebuke from high authority, that if any individual should fire one shot at a Hitler official, "even though the shot missed," there would follow "a pogrom which nothing could stop."

In other words, thousands of Jewish people, innocent of any wrong doing, might be massacred because of a crime, perhaps that of a maniac, for which they would be in no way responsible.

Also, beer is here, but prohibition remains in the Constitution, not easy to remove.

The President's message reveals a plan to put 250,000 men at work. Any start is wlcome. No one or 100 ideas could give work to the 12,000,000 idle.

A man well informed says France worries about the danger of going off the gold standard. Strange what power is possessed by the fetish gold. We have our supply safely locked up, like the genuine tooth of Buddha in the oriental temple, and mean to hold on to it.

A wise young woman asked concerning President Roosevelt: "If he does so much right away, what in Heaven's name will he find to do through all the rest of the four years?" No need to worry about that yet.

CHARGE LIKE THAT AGAINST AL CAPONE

Former N. Y. Bank Head's Arrest Approved by Roosevelt

New York, March 22 (INS)—Charles E. Mitchell, former chairman of the National City Bank and native of Chelsea, Mass., was held in $10,000 today for hearing March 29 on a federal warrant charging he wilfully attempted to evade an income tax of $657,152 in 1929.

Mitchell's arrest is declared a part of the campaign of President Franklin D. Roosevelt to prosecute all allegel violators of the national banking laws. The arrest was ordered by Atty.-Gen. Homer S. Cummings who said:

> "President Roosevelt has been kept advised of these developments and they have his approval. Federal Atty. Medalie of New York will proceed forthwith to present the case to a grand jury with a view to pressing for an early trial."

GREAT FIGHT FORECAST

Mitchell was arrested in his Fifth ave. home last night and driven at once to the Federal building, where he was arraigned before Federal Judge Coxe, who released him under bail pending the hearing, March 29.

One of the greatest legal fights in the history of America is expected in the case.

The offense with which Mitchell is charged is the same as that for which Al Capone, Chicago gang leader, was sent to Atlanta Penitentiary for a long term.

ON HIS OWN TESTIMONY

The arrest warrant was the outgrowth of testimony by Mitchell before the Senate finance investigating committee that in 1929 he sold 18,300 shares of National City Bank stock to his wife, and later re-purchased it, at a loss of $2,800,000. He admitted to the Senate committee that this sale was "frankly for the purpose" of reducing his income tax for that year. The transaction showed a paper loss of about $2,800,000.

The affidavit on which the warrant was issued charged Mitchell had a gross income for the year 1929 of $3,006,705.16, for which $1,206,195.02 was salary; $140,105.47 interest on bank deposits and bonds; $1,338237.97 profits of sales on stocks and bonds; $262,874.78, dividends; $4789.22 interest on Liberty bonds; and $4503.78, dividends and directors' fees. The lawful deductions were set at $183,299.91.

PAID NO 1929 TA X

The return filed by Mitchell for 1929 showed a purported net loss of 548,000, which resulted in his paying no tax for that year.

The record showed that Mitchell made the sale of the bank stock to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Rend Mitchell, Dec. 20, 1929, at a price of $212 a share, and that on March 1930 he bought it back at the same price, when the stock was selling on the market at about $40 a share.

Mitchell, who worked himself up from a clerkship to the front ranks of finance, resigned as head of the National City Bank and its securities affiliate, th eNational City

Casket of 4 Boards is Last Plea

Leaving a farewell note that he wanted at his funeral a casket of four boards and no flowers, the body of Antonio Cellucci, 70, was found hanging to a cross beam in the cellar of his home in O'Neill pl., Brighton, this morning by his wife, Angelina Cellucci.

Cellucci, who had been ill, got up at midnight to read, stating he could not sleep. At 6 o'clock his wife started a search and found her husband's body in the cellar.

Nearby was the following note, alleged to have been written by Cellucci:

> "I am Antonio Cellucci, and the money I have I leave to my wife, Angelina. If my wife should die, all the money will go to my son, Joseph. In the Brighton post-office I have $900. At my funeral I want a casket of four boards and no flowers. (Signed) Antonio Cellucci."

M'DONALD BACK IN LONDON

Croydon, Eng., March 22 (INS)—Speeding by air to London, Prime Minister MacDonald arrived at Croydon Airport at 10:55 a. m., today, after a hurried flight from Paris.

The British statesman, hastening home to inform his cabinet of the result of his conferences with Premiers Daladier of France and Mussolini of Italy, was accompanied by his daughter, Ishbel, and his foreign minister, Sir John Simon, who took active part in the conferencealmed at preserving European peace.

The three took off by plane from Le Bourget field, in France, early this morning, for their flight across the channel. Several French officials were present to bid their British guests farewell.

GIRL SLASHED, YOUTH SEIZED

Edgerly rd., Back Bay, a quiet thoroughfare since it dropped the name of Bickerstaff st. four weeks ago, was the scene early today of a slashing affray that sent a night club waitress to City Hospital and a South End youth to a police cell.

The waitress, Miss Hazel Williams, 21, told police she returned home from work to find Pasquale Costello, 21, of Columbus ave., in the company of a girl friend with whom she shares the apartment.

Her orders for Costello to leave were ignored and the resultant argument ended when she received several slashes across the face and head, she said.

Screams drew Patrolman Joseph F. Kiley and Cecil Craig of Back Bay Station to the scene and Costello was charged wit hassault and battery.

Fairbanks Still Smiles Despite Troubles in Interview

Hollywood, Cal., March 22 (INS)—"It's tough to be famous."

While disclaiming any major title to fame, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., admitted with a grin today that some of the "slings of outraged fortune" are to say the least, "unpleasant."

A year ago he made a picture with that title and now he realizes the story was not "all hokum."

FAMED SMILE STAYS

Two suits have been filed against him by Jorgen Dietz, German chemical engineer, asking $50,000 for alleged alienation of affections, and $20,000 for asserted false imprisonment.

In addition, young Fairbanks and his glamorous wife, Joan Crawford, have separated. Both deny that this was in any way connected with the legal action.

But Doug can still smile. Emerging from a German prison camp constructed within Hollywood "sound stage," and wearing a soiled British flying uniform, Fairbanks dismissed his troubles with a wave of the hand.

"Everything will adjust itself in time," he said in the first interview he had granted since the filing of the suits.

When everything happened all at once, a friend wrote to me to extend his sympathy. He said that no one could figure on reaching the top of the ladder without at least two disconcerting incidents.

"Not that I could call myself so very famous, but I suppose it is true that the Dietz suits are the outgrowths of a public career. It's the price to be paid.

SEPARATION PRIVATE AFFAIR

"Of course, the separation of Joan and myself is a private matter and has nothing whatsoever to do with our public lives.

"We quietly decided on it several months ago. There weren't any scenes and there won't be any.

"I suppose it is unfortunate that everything had to happen at once . . . "

He smiled and shrugged his shoulders.

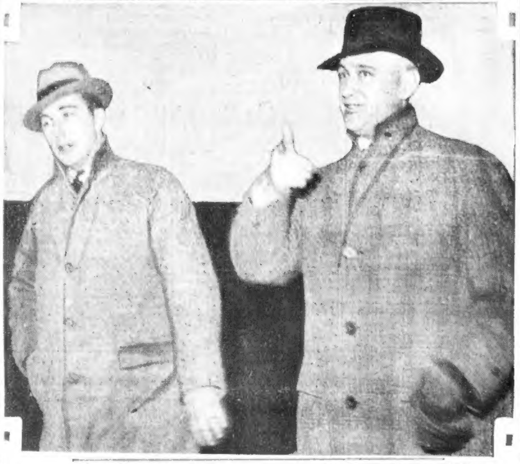
"Thank the Lord that I've got plenty of work to do. It keeps my mind off things. I like to work."

WEDDING PLAN DENIED

Fairbanks, Jr., smiled when advised that in Copenhagen, Dietz former wife, Loulou Dietz, had denied she had said that Fairbanks planned to marry her in Europe this summer after divorcing Miss Crawford.

"I am glad that this fact has now come out," the young actor said.

New Accuser Faces Brave Widow



EDWARD McMAHON CHIEF OF POLICE PIERCE

BARES HIS LOVE

Edward McMahon, Peabody reserve patrolman, whom Dist. Atty. Hugh A. Cregg and Chief of Police Edward Pierce will bring before Mrs. Jessie B. Costello in Salem jail today. McMahon is alleged to have confessed to being Mrs. Costello's secret sweetheart.

REMAINS CALM DESPITE NEW CHARGES

Mrs. Jessie B. Costello, widow of Fire Captain William J. Costello of Peabody, today continued to smile and keep calm in Salem jail, where she is being held for trial on the first degree murder charge in connection with the poison death of her husband. (Boston American Photos.)

CONFESSION BY OFFICER DISCLOSES ROMANCE

McMahon Tells of Poison Hint by Mrs. Costello

McMahon's Confession Complete on Page 4

Secret love in the life of Mrs. Jessie B. Costello of Peabody, first revealed in Saturday's Boston Evening American as an alleged motive in the murder of her husband, today was woven about Edward J. McMahon, young Peabody police officer.

In an amazing confession quoted by authorities, McMahon told of clandestine meetings with the pretty 31-year-old widow, who was both widowed and jailed through the cyanide death of Fire Capt. William J. Costello.

Meetings at the Costello home while the captain was on fire duty; efforts to break off the romance for the sake of his wife and two children; statements by Mrs. Costello that her husband had not long to live and her suggestion of a double suicide with the officer were included in the quoted confession.

Talked With Priest Before Confessing

He named another Peabody man also as the object of Mrs. Costello's affections. The name was given authorities who withheld it with the announcement that disclosure would "amaze" the city.

Mental torture accounted for McMahon's revelations, investigators said. He made them, they added, after he talked with a priest and attended church. The statement was given while his wife attended two babies, unaware of the confession.

For the first time since she was jailed on a first degree murder charge Friday, the smile of Mrs. Costello faded when McMahon was brought face to face with her at the jail.

"I don't want to talk about it without my lawyer," they quoted the widow. She retained her usual calm and slept soundly through the night, jail officials reported early today.

William G. Clark, counsel for Mrs. Costello, first heard of the McMahon statement from a reporter of the Boston Evening American.

Counsel Orders Widow to Make No Comment

"This is all news to me. I never heard any suicide talk. She never spoke to me of any affair with McMahon," he said.

Clark immediately sent word to

MAYOR REFUTES TALK OF JOBS

Mayor Curley returned to Boston early today and denied published reports from Washington that he had been told by President Roosevelt of objections to his appointment as ambassador to Italy.

The mayor denied also that several minor appointments were offered him and that he rejected them all.

"I received no such information and I had no discussion whatsoever in regard to federal jobs or patronage," the mayor said as he alighted from the Washington train at South Station with City Treasurer Edmund L. Dolan.

"The President is too busy, it seems to me, to talk of anything along that line. I don't think he even gave it a thought."

Asked about his conference with Secretary of State Hull, the Mayor replied that he did not care to discuss that.

"I will say, however, that all my conversations in Washington were in regard to the Maine banking situation and emergency situation," he said.

Other reports, including one that he had recognized James Roosevelt, son of President Roosevelt, as the official distributor of federal patronage in Massachusetts, were also denied by Curley.

"Such a statement is all news to me," was his comment.

Roosevelt Signature to Make 3.2 Beer Legal

Washington, March 22 (INS)—The signatures of President Roosevelt, Vice-President Garner and Speaker Rainey alone were needed today on the administration's prohibition modification bill to start the legalized sale of 3.2 beer and wine April 7 in 23 states.

The Vice-President must sign first, attesting the Senate has passed the bill. Speaker Rainey next will sign for the House. Then Mr. Roosevelt must attach his signature, and modification of the bone-dry Volstead act will become a fact.

A special section of the bill provides it "shall take effect on the expiration of 15 days after the date of enactment." This was interpreted to mean that 15 days must elapse following the date of enactment before sales would be allowed. This would start beer and wine flowing on April 7, wherever the state laws permit its sale.

With only oruting steps left to modify prohibition, various wet persons convicted of manufacturing or selling beer in violation of the Volstead act, Rep. Sabath (D) of Illinois, introduced a resolution, giving President Roosevelt specific power to free "beer prisoners."

The move, at first regarded as a

HOUSE TO PASS FARM BILL TODAY 2-1, SAYS RAINEY

BUT ACT FACES 2 WEEK DELAY IN SENATE

Republicans Assail It as $1,000,000,000 Worth of Pork

Washington, March 22 (INS)—The administration farm relief bill, which is Number 4 on the fast-moving Roosevelt legislative program, was slated for passage in the House today.

With half of the four hours debate allowed on the measure exhausted, the vote was expected early in the afternoon. Speaker Rainey predicted passage by a two to one vote.

Despite evident misgivings of a large part of the House, members were rallying to the cry to support the President.

Having sacrificed its right of amendment, the House turned the job of revamping the measure over to the Senate. A two weeks' delay there was indicated.

$1,000,000,000 LAND TAX

Providing as it does for the levying of a processing tax estimated at from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, the House bill gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to lease land, and thus cut production and raise prices.

A revival of the McNary-Haugen bill, with its equalization fee plan, was under way. This may be offered as a substitute.

Because of sad experience with former farm measures, House members were reluctant to give the administration bill whole-hearted approval.

Severe critics of the bill, for the most part, were just as cautious in their attitude. The ranking Republican on the agriculture committee, Clarke of New York, lambasted it in debate and then said he would "go along" with the administration.

"NO ROOSEELT BILL"

"I have unlimited confidence in the President and in Secretary of Agriculture Wallace," said eRp. Losier (D) of Mo., explaining his attitude. "I believe they will wisely sense the will of the American people in administering the act."

Rep. Lamneck (D) of Ohio refused to follow the administration.

"I do not believe this is a Roosevelt bill," he said. "I give him credit for better judgment. I favor any legislation that will increase agriculture's purchasing power, but this won't do it."

Rep. Britten (R) of Illinois, expressing the opposition of members from many city consuming districts, said:

"I have never in 20 years' experience been called upon to vote upon such a gigantic pork-barrel. You are going to pass a bill that will tax every person in the United States on the essentials of life."

Wiley Post Hops for Mexico City

Oklahoma City, March 22 (AP)—Wiley Post, world flight record holder, hopped off from Curtiss-Wright airport yesterday afternoon for Mexico City by way of Brownsville, Tex.

Besides his "Robot" pilot, a collection of instruments to hold the plane upon its course without a building hand, he had four passengers.

HOOVER HOME FOR LONG REST

Palo Alto, Cal., March 22 (AP)—Free of the President's responsibility, ceremony and Secret Service cordon, Herbert Hoover came home, received the greetings of friends and neighbors and announced he was going to take "a long, long rest."

He was a different Herbert Hoover than the tired, responsibility-ridden executive Palo Alto saw last fall when he came here at the close of his campaign to vote. He smiled, spoke a few words of appreciation for the quiet reception given him, answered questions, posed for news photographers, and shook hands with many well-wishers.

There was a brief speech by Earl C. Thomas, mayor of Palo Alto, that end with:

"We are proud to have you back."

"That's good of you," the former President replied. "It is indeed a great pleasure to come home. For 19 years I have been going away from California rather than coming back. Now I hope to reverse that."

To the reporter, he said:

"I think I'm entitled to have some time to myself. I have no plans whatever. I hope I won't have to say what I am going to do at 9:02 a. m. or 9:03 p. m. Wednesday or Thursday. I believe I'm entitled to a long, long rest."

Asked how long he expected to stay, Mr. Hoover said:

DAVIS TO OFFER ARMS PLAN

Washington, March 22—Details of the so-called "American Plan" for a European arms agreement are revealed to Universal Service by high official sources as follows.

A promise of wholehearted cooperation on Premier Mussolini's proposal for a 10-year war moratorium in Europe under the Kelloggingg-Briand pact, without however involving this country in any obligations to invoke sanctions in the event of a violation.

General approval of the policy of a definite compromise on European land armaments, in the interest of increased mutual confidence.

A standing offer of the good offices of the country, if needed, to aid in working out the actual figures for the arms compromise, or to facilitate agreement upon any other portion of the British and Italian programs.

A general agreement with the expressed policy of the Italian proposal that success of the arms conference can be more easily attained by inclusion of all interested European nations in the question, than by an aloof attitude on the part of a few.

This program, drafted by the administration as America's position regarding pending efforts to bring about a European arms agreement, is to be taken abroad by Ambassador Norman H. Davis when he sails from New York Thursday aboard the S. S. Manhattan. He will first present it to the British government in London, and then will proceed to Geneva.

'Give Us Beer,' Plea at B. U.

Following the lead of Harvard, Boston University students today made it plain that they would go to any length to have beer served in the college cafeteria when it is legalized.

In an unofficial statement from the manager of the lunchroom at the College of Business Administration, it was made clear that no beer would be sold at that lunchroom. Almost immediately, students drew up a petition asking the university authorities to allow the lunchrooms to serve beer.

If the petition is now successful, the students will demand that the House of Representatives, student governing body, present the petition through its formal channels.

New York, March 22 (AP)—Fashionable Manhattan is getting ready for beer.

"Will you come to an informal beer party to meet Mr. and Mrs. So-and-So?"

HOUSE FAVORS BEER IN N. H.

Concord, N. H., March 22 (AP)—The House of Representatives of New Hampshire has approved, by a vote of 233 to 146, and sent to the Senate a bill calling for the sale of intoxicating liquors through State stores.

Proponents of the measure, filed by F. Clyde Keefe, of Dover, predicted passage in the Senate by a strong majority.

More than six liquor bills, all designed to repeal the State enforcement law and set up liquor sales machinery, have been introduced in the House, but, by agreement of House leaders and proponents, action has centered on the Keefe bill.

The measure would not become effective for 30 days after the national prohibition amendment had been repealed, and then only if New Hampshire should vote for national repeal.

Under the bill, State stores would be set up and liquor sold in sealed packages. Each buyer would be required to pay one dollar for a license to the town or city clerk. First class hotels could sell beer, ales and wine only. No hotel could have a bar at which liquor could be sold.

AUTO FOR COLES INSTEAD OF PICK

With his election as Nahant superintendent of the highways, Harvey Coles, 49, not only defeated his nephew for the position, but received an auto from the town in place of pick and shovel.

For 18 years Coles has worked on Nahant roads and streets the implements that marked his profession always in his hand or over his shoulder.

But now that's all over with and the newly elected highway superintendent—he won by 61 votes—now can ride around in a car.

"You see it was this way," he began, titling back the chair in his headquarters between the Nahant police station and a school.

"My nephew, A. Stanley Goodell, had the job, but he didn't fit so strong with the advisory board. I didn't think he could get the job again so I decided to keep it in the family and run myself.

"My votes totalled 354, his counted up to 295. There were two others in the running, but they didn't get to first base."

NAZI VIOLENCE AGAINST JEWS CONTINUES

Many Germans See End of Republic in Hitler Policy

Berlin, March 21 (US)—Continuance of anti-Semitic violence today marked what many of the German people believe is the end of the republic.

As Chancellor Adolf Hitler moved toward his dictatorship, German Jews, persecuted by Nazi Bravos, kept under cover.

In Pirmasens, numerous Jewish-owned stores were plundered. Windows were smashed and one store was set afire.

Max Kaiser, chairman of a Jewish lodge, was arrested in Munich on a charge of heading the organization. In Karlsruhe, more than 100 persons were arrested.

On Berlin's Unter den Linden, a number of persons looking like Jews, were accosted by Nazi storm troopers.

It is almost impossible to get Jews to give information about molestation. They are fearful of consquences. Headquarters of Jewish organizations refuse to answer telephones.

Dr. David of the Supreme Court at Leipzig, applied for retirement, because of the government's sentiment.

Pamphlets printed by Angriff, official organ of the Nazis that is edited by Minister of Propaganda Goebbels, call for special laws against the Jews.

In them are such phrases as:

"The Jews demand that Hitler be murdered," "Throw the Jew newspaper out of your homes," "Exit the rogues and Jews," and "Our demand is comprehensible; we demand special laws against Jews and other traitors."

U. S. Probes Persecution of German Jews

Washington, March 22 (US)—The State Department today awaited a report from the American embassy in Berlin on the anti-Jewish campaign of the Hitler regime. The possibility of diplomatic exchanges was seen.

The State Department acted after Rabbi Stephen S. Wise and Bernard S. Deutsch, president of the American Jewish Congress, had laid before Under-Secretary of State Phillips, a detailed account of the anti-Jewish activities in Germany.

Phillips reported to Secretary of State Hull, who then ordered instructions forwarded to eBrlin.

Indignation spead to Congress over the anti-Jewish activities. Moves were initiated to open the doors of this country to Jewish refugees from Germany. Rep. Celler (D.) of New York said he would offer a resolution in the House today to request the State Department to send a protest to the German government against persecution of American citizens of Jewish descent, and asking the German government to protect all racial minorities in the interest of humanity.

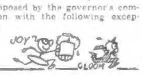
VERMONT BEER BILL ADVANCES

Montpelier, Vt., March 22 (AP)—Vermont's 3.2 per cent beer bill was advanced to third reading in the lower house of the general assembly on a roll call vote of 152 to 83. After a barrage of amendments had been disposed of the bill emerged substantially the same as proposed by the governor's commission with the following exceptions:



Sale to minors under 18 years of age by holders of second class licenses (where not consumed on the premises) is prohibited. The age limit under the original bill was 16 years.

Hotels having 20 sleeping rooms or more may be licensed to sell the beverage with meals when the town in which it is located votes "no." The original bill set the number of rooms at 50.

Vt. Votes Convention

Montpelier, Vt., March 21 (AP)—A bill providing for the calling of constitutional conventions in Vermont was passed by the Senate and sent to Gov. Stanley C. Wilson for signature.

PRUNE PUDDING
The White House 7½-Cent Meal..

A luncheon costing just 7½ cents was served at the White House, yesterday, by the Nation's "First Lady." It was relished by the newspaperwomen, who attended Mrs. Roosevelt's weekly press conference. That's one meal that will not go on the reporter's expense account. It was planned for the President's wife by Miss Flora Rose, director of home economics, at Cornell University. You see Eunice Garey, 248 Bowdoin st., Dorchester, testing and praising the White House meal, as she tried out the 7½ cents bill-o fare at Warmuth's, in Devonshire st. (Boston American photo.)

STATE SALARY SLASH BILL IN HOUSE TODAY

Majority Expected to Favor Straight 15 Percent Cut

The House by a substantial majority is expected to adopt wage cuts of 10 and 15 per cent for State employes and officials at its session today, with but slight change.

Of more than half a dozen amendments offered, but one, calling for a five per cent slash for those whose salary is not more than $1250 appears to have any chance of being accepted. That amendment was put in by Rep. Roland D. Sawyer of Ware.

MILLIONS SAVED

As the bill now stands however, all those below $5250 a year would be cut 10 per cent and those above 15 per cent. On an eight-month basis, the 10 and 15 per cent decreases would save the state $1,508,698 and on a 12-month basis $2,234,847.

Among amendments pending is one by Rep. William Baker of Newton to make the reduction for members of the legislature 15 per cent instead of 10 per cent. Another, by Rep. Anthony McNulty of Boston would exempt clerks, stenographers, messengers or telephone operators and employes of the superintendent of buildings and the sergeant-at-arms, a matter of $160,000.

Under the terms of another amendment offered by Rep. Frank McFarland of Boston, no salary reduction would be made where employes receive $1200 or less.

FOR MINIMUM WAGE

Rep. Christian Herter warned his colleagues that real estate is groaning under tax burdens and what is saved in salaries is saved to these taxpayers. Legislative bodies, he said, must not let their sympathies run away with them but must do the courageous thing and reduce cost of government.

Rep. Sawyer of Ware, in pleading for his amendment, asked that at least the $16 a week minimum wage be retained. To drop the lowest salaried workers below that level, as the 10 per cent slash would do, he said, was unthinkable.

Beer to Be Served at Pops Concerts

Sparkling music and foaming beer will be on the Pops program this year for the first time since prohibition. And beer, according to Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Pops orchestra, will not dilute the high standard of music.

"To my mind," said Fiedler, "Pops audiences have acquired a high musical standard. I don't believe this standard will be lowered by the resumption of real beer."

His will, filed for probate today, stipulated that 90 per cent of his estate of approximately $25,000 be used to educate a boy or girl in some non-sectarian school, the beneficiary to be selected by vote of the pastors.

Stevens had two daughters, Miss Ethel, 35, and Miss Elaine, 40, both of Brooklyn. To the former he left his Encyclopedia Brittanica and to the latter his fraternity pin and all family photographs. His will did not specify who was to get the remaining 10 per cent of his estate.

LICENSE PROBLEM TO LEAVE BAY STATE THIRSTY FOR BEER

21 CITIES LACK LAW FOR SALE OF BREW

Rep. Lee Files Bill for Beer of Five Per Cent

While legislation was rushed today to provide for beer of at least 3.2 per cent, due to be allowed by federal law in 15 days, Boston and many other cities and towns of Massachusetts faced a license problem that may hold up thirsty ones for some time.

Even though the beer is legalized, it was pointed out today, no provisions have been made for licensing in Boston, 16 other cities and 229 towns in Massachusetts.

The action must be taken by the voters and machinery for a special election would require a space of time that would bring it much beyond the date upon which federal authority for beer becomes a reality.

21 CITIES IN LUCK

Twenty-one other cities of the State and 87 towns took such action and may begin operations at once. The cities nearest Boston include Chelsea and Revere.

All liquor legislation with the exception of the bill to raise the legal standard here from 2.75 to at least 3.2, was temporarily laid aside today in order that concentration could be made on the raising of that standard.

The bill filed by Rep. Robert V Lee, of South Boston, would authorize beer of 5 per cent. Rep. Lee said he fixed the standard in his bill at 5 per cent to make certain that the 3.2 per cent provision in the federal legislation would be promptly enacted in Massachusetts.

LAW BARS BREWING

Until the 3.2 bill is passed, brewers pointed out, they are barred from even the manufacture of beer of that content because of the present 2.75 standard which prevents not only sale but manufacture until the highter content is authorized by the legislature.

Another bill in addition to that of Rep. Lee was filed by Rep. Lewis R. Sullivan of Dorchester. It provided for legalization of 3.2 beer. As soon as these measures are out of the way, hearings on the provisions of the Warren bill will resume at the State House.

G. B. S. Sprains Ankle Dodging Grass Skirted Hula Dancers

Aboard the Canadian Pacific Liner Empress of Britain, March 22 (US)—Crowding of comely but slightly ponderous hula dancers around George Bernard Shaw before the Empress of Britain sailed from Hilo Sunday resulted in a sprained leg for the dramatist, it was learned aboard ship. Now stretched in a deck chair, and wearing a faded green-gold cape and a remarkable hat, he has resumed work upon the manuscript that claimed his time in the earlier days of his cruise around the world.

Shaw, who is due at San Francisco Friday, will be the guest of William Randolph Hearst during his brief stay in California. Mr. Hearst's private plane is to meet Shaw, and he and Mrs. Shaw will fly directly to the Hearst ranch, at San Simeon, Cal.

Here It Is! Sparkling Wine and All Within the Limit

Washington, March 22 (US)—Sparkling, palatable wine, although containing only 3.2 per cent of alcohol by weight, will be manufactured under the beer and wine bill which President Roosevelt will sign today, according to representatives of California grape growers here.

Senator McAdoo (D), of California, who was instrumental in having the wine provisions retained in the bill, said vintners had informed him an enjoyable beverage of the 3.2 alcoholic variety could be produced from grapes.

Nicola Giulii, of Los Angeles, a leading grape-grower of California, and wine maker in the days before prohibition, declared his organization immediately would begin experimenting with beverages of the 3.2 variety. He said:

"I believe a palatable, enjoyable grape beverage containing not more than 3.2 per cent of alcohol, can be manufactured, and that there will be a worth-while demand for it.

"In making 3.2 wine the manufacturers first would produce the usual wine of from 10 to 12 per cent alcohol, and then dilute it so that the alcoholic content will not exceed that allowed by law.

"Perhaps mild champagne could be made. Carbonated water might serve to make the beverage better."

Wife's Failure May Deport Him

Lawrence, March 22—Gabriel Hovan, of this city, is facing deportation as a result of his wife's failure to learn English sufficiently well and his counsel is today preparing to take his case to the Department of Labor at Washington.

He later allegedly entered the country illegally. He would have been allowed to remain if his wife had passed the final test for naturalization.

'Snifter' or 'Smacker' It's Up to Court in Auto Case

Resumption of the trial of Miss Ruth V. Clausen of Commonwealth ave., Chestnut Hill, on charges of operating an auto under the influence of liquor in Middlesex court today is expected to settle the perplexing differentiation between a "snifter" and a "smacker."

The two terms were debated at length in court yesterday afternoon, during the hearing of testimony of two police officers, of the Newton department. Patrolman Joseph J. Green testified the young woman told him she had a couple of "smackers" in Belmont.

Patrolman Michael J. Keating, however, didn't hear it that way. His understanding of the young woman's reply was that she had taken a couple of "snifters."

At considerable expense and wear and tear on its nervous system, the Boston Evening American has located an authority on contemporary Belmontese and can enlighten you.

According to this authority a "smacker" is a "big hooker." In comparison with this a "snifter" is a "short one."

FIRE PROBED BY ARSON SQUAD

Members of the arson squad of the bureau of fire prevention today continued their investigation of the two-alarm blaze which caused $15,000 damage in the two lower floors of a three-story building in Portland st., near North Station, early last night.

The blaze, which started about 6 p. m., raged for over an hour before firemen brought it under control. The thick acrid smoke from burning reed furniture in the building forced firemen to don gas masks and work in relays to battle the stubborn blaze.

The building is occupied by the Cyrus I. Harvey baby carriage and furniture store. The blaze was confined to the lower floors, but smoke filled the entire building and caused considerable damage to stock there.

Thousands of commuters, hurrying to the North Station, stopped and jammed the streets to watch the operations of firemen.

Peabody Officer Bares Relations With Widow Accused in Peabody Poisoning

The confession made by Reserve Patrolman Edward McMahon, of Peabody, to Chief of Police Edward F. Pierce, relating his associations with Mrs. Jessie B. Costello, held as the poison slayer of her husband, William J. Costello, follows:

"I didn't have any idea that it would lead to anything like this," McMahon told the police. "I never dreamed I would land in a murder investigation, occupying such a central role. I tried time and again to break it off, and she just wouldn't listen to it. She could paint everything so rosy. I never had anything to do with Jessie until I went to her house three or four months ago. That was the start of it all.

"Even when her husband was found dead in the house, I never dreamed that he died from other than natural causes. The State charges that she killed him. This thought never entered my head. My God, to think I was so close to this woman.

"I can't explain even now how it happened that I went there so often. She would call me at my house. Sometimes she would see me on the street, and then I would find myself over at her home.

"She talked constantly of Bill being ill. She would tell me he had an attack of this, or an attack of that. I never paid much attenion to it. I figured he was sick from time to time. He was always ailing, according to her.

"One night at the house she wanted me to run away with her for four or five days to New York. She said we would have a good time, that she had to go over there, and she wanted me to go. I told her I couldn't go, that I wouldn't dream of going. I'm married and have two children. I figured if she did go, I would have a chance during her absence to break it off. I was hoping she would go.

"WONDERFUL TIME"

"She tried to tell me there was no harm in it, and that nobody would know. It was ridiculous on the face of it, of course.

"At another time she said she had decided that she and I would go away together for all time. She would take Bobby, her three-year-old boy. She said she wouldn't bother to take the other two children. I was to take Nancy, my 19-months-old girl.

"Everything was to be rosy. We would have a wonderful time, she kept telling me. I knew I couldn't run away with her, and I knew I wouldn't. I don't think she could understand why I kept refusing. I couldn't listen to such a foolish, an awful proposition. I told her so. She kept insisting. I don't think I ever convinced her that I couldn't.

"You ask me if Bill Costello, her husband, knew of my going to the house. I don't think he ever suspected me. He knew I visited the house from time to time, but he never dreamed of other things, as far as I know.

"She even told my wife that her husband was sick, and told her several times of his being ill, and having an attack of something. One night she told my wife that 'Bill' has one foot in the grave, but I guess he doesn't know it.'

"I didn't pay any attention to what she said. I figured she was just talking. The authorities say she poisoned Bill and caused his death. They say she plotted this thing in advance.

PHONED TO HIM

"If she did, I knew nothing about it. I never even dreamed of it. She never discussed it with me. She told me a lot of things that you people seem mighty interested in now. You think they throw considerable light on her frame of mind. I couldn't see it then.

"I don't know why she kept telling me he was sick, or that he wouldn't last long.

"Just a short time before Bill was found dead, two or three days before he was found dead in the house, she said something about something big going to happen. She oftentimes said things I didn't pay attention to.

"Another time she called me on the telephone at my house. I told her to come over with Bill. She said Bill couldn't come, that he had gone to the movies, but that she would come. My wife was home. She came, and we sat in the living room. She talked to my wife about Bill being sick quite often, and said he had one foot in the grave and didn't know it.

"ONE FOOT IN GRAVE"

"You know I was confined to the J. B. Thomas Hospital a short time ago. I was operated on for removal of an appendix. Well, she kept coming to the hospital, I think every day. I told her she would have to stop it, that people were beginning to talk.

"She said she didn't care, that they would talk anyway. She wouldn't listen to me. She kept telling me to pay no attention to the flood of rumors that were about. What did she care for them? she kept saying.

"I tried to break it all off then," McMahon told the police. "She wouldn't listen to me. She had such a fascinating way of talking you out of things. She just wouldn't let me alone.

"LET'S END IT ALL"

"Then she said, suddenly, 'Let's end it all. The both of us. I've got enough here to do away with the both of us,' and she lifted her bag from her lap. She started to open it. I don't know what was in it. I told her not to be silly, that I wouldn't commit suicide for any woman, that I was going to call it quits, that I thought more of my wife and kids than I did of her, and she would have to leave me alone.

"She gave up that idea, I guess. She didn't mention it again.

"Then one night she thought up another idea. We would run away together. I was to take Nancy, my little girl, and she was to take Bobby, her 3-year-old son. She said she wouldn't bother to take the other two children. She said she didn't think it would make much difference to Bill, that she and he didn't get along so well, anyway.

"DIDN'T CARE"

"I couldn't go away with her. I didn't want to go away with her. I told her so, and we argued about it then. She insisted that I do it. I told her I would not, and I didn't.

"Then somebody invited her to New York for four or five days, or she said they did. She told me it was a great chance for me to go with her. She said everything would be all right. When I told her I wouldn't go she was mad. She said what difference if people talked, she didn't care."

As McMahon ran his hands through his hair and visibly shook as he told his story, he declared, "How could I get away from her? She wouldn't let me. She chased me. She came to my home. She insisted that I go to hers. I would say I wouldn't and then I would find myself there.

TELLS EVERYTHING

"I decided when I was in the hospital that I would break with Jessie. When she came I told her. She went into a fury. She wouldn't listen to it. She talked and talked and said it had to go on. I told her I was insistent, and that I wouldn't go on with it. How I ever got involved that far I couldn't tell, but there I was.

"I went to church as soon as I got out of the hospital. I told everything, and I decided then and there to stop seeking her. She heard I went.

"She got hold of me, and talked and talked. She could talk you out of anything, I think. I found myself back there. Now look at the disgrace that has come. The whole world will know of this. I'll lose everything. I can't look for pity. I wouldn't take it if it came.

"I did know Jessie Costello, and I knew her well, but I did not have anything to do with the death of her husband. If I had known that anything like this was in the air, I would have left the house fast.

AFRAID OF TALK

"Somebody has told you police, you say, that somebody saw her running her hands through my hair as she sat at my bedside in the hospital. I guess that is true. I can't remember all that happened when I was in there, but she did come so often, and I was afraid—everybody seemed to be talking.

"I told her about her father, Andrew Fyfe. He ordered me out of the house. He said I was causing the neighbors to talk, and he wouldn't have any more of it. He told me if I didn't get out, he would throw me out. I had to go. He ordered me to.

"Then he stopped me in the garage. He said he was mad while he was in the house, but that the neighbors were talking about scandal and he didn't want his daughter mixed up in neighborhood gossip. He told me he guessed perhaps everything between Jess and I was all right, and that it was a good, clean relationship, but that I must stop coming to the house.

INVITED TO HOUSE

"Jessie told him to let me alone, that she invited me to the house and that he had no right to tell me to stay away. I stayed away, though. I knew her father was in earnest, and it was the chance to make a break.

"I don't think Bill Costello ever knew of it. He knew I visited the house from time to time. He saw me there, and I oftentimes met him outside. He came to my house. To the day he died, I don't think he ever suspected.

"I don't know what she saw in me to care so madly, but I guess she must have. She didn't want me to stop seeing her. She was always content to let tomorrow take care of itself. Sometimes I think she lived in a world where men alone walked. Women did not seem to interest her much.

SEES MAN VISITOR

"One day I called at the house. I think it was in the afternoon. Bill Costello was in the back yard raking up leaves, I think. I started in the back door. I saw a man come through the front door, and Mrs. Costello didn't see me. She raced to the front of the house, threw her arms about his neck and hugged and kissed him. I left.

"She talked from time to time about Bill's money. I just don't remember this clearly. She would say she needed Bill's money, and then she would say she didn't care about getting his money all the time. It wasn't clear to me, as I think of it now.

"Of course, she was always a good dresser. She liked fashionable clothes, and she could dress well. She knew how to dress snappily.

RETURNS THE CASH

"I've never been able to figure out one thing that happened. One day a friend of Mrs. Costello's called at my house and said something about 'the blind leading the blind' as they talked to my wife. I think this will prove of consequence before the investigation is through.

"I think I've told all I knew about this thing. The sudden death of Bill Costello meant nothing to me, so far as an investigation was concerned. It is hard to realize that the thing has turned this way.

"I talked with Mrs. Costello once after he died. She had some money she was holding for me. I called her and told her it was urgent that I get it. I needed to turn it in. I got it that afternoon."

The Women's Service Club, 464 Massachusetts ave., has extended an invitation to unemployed women of Greater Boston to attend a meeting at the club tonight for the purpose of forming a clearing house where women will be helped in getting work. Mrs. John B. Hall, president of the club, will preside.

Wed a College Grad? Never! Say B. U. Co-Eds and Men

In an effort to determine whether college students prefer to marry other collegians or whether they prefer working girls and boys without college educations, 10 boys and 10 girls of Boston University were asked what they thought about marriages between college students.

One similarity in the answers marked the co-eds, if not as gold-diggers, at least as ambitious.

One co-ed at the college of liberal arts feels that there is no student at Boston University who could fill her requirements. So far as she is concerned, student marriage is out.

At the College of Practical Arts and Letters it was decided that not only must the man have a good bankroll but also a good background. When asked what was meant by background, one girl replied:

"Oh, well, you know, one can't just marry anybody."

One requirement that has the man at Boston University in the air is that they be kind to dumb animals.

Law school students would marry coeds if they were beautiful and not too intelligent. The main idea is to show off their wives before friends and relatives.

The general trend of the replies was to the effect that student marriages are not wise, the men stating that college girls make good playmates, but not helpmates.

REALTOR TRIED FOR ATTACK

J. Irving Connolly, Weston real estate operator and former special policeman, faced trial in Middlesex court today on charges of attack on Miss Bertha Lincoln, 27, of Fayette st., Cambridge, after a house party in Weston last December.

According to the outline given the jury, Connolly took Miss Lincoln to his real estate office after the party on the pretext that he had to make a telephone call.

Considerable drinking took place at the party but Miss Lincoln confined herself to one drink, according to Dist.-Atty. Warren L. Bishop.

After the alleged attack, Connolly drove Miss Lincoln to Cambridge and the government contends, tried to threaten her into silence by telling her he was a policeman and always carried a revolver.

HARVARD CUTS LIVING COST

Slashes in living costs for undergraduates at Harvard with the new prices becoming effective next fall, will place the fixed charges for a student in one of the Harvard houses at much less than $1000 a year.

Dean A. C. Hanford, who announced the reductions, made this assertion last night in summing up the changes. Tuition at $400, board at about $300 and less expensive rooms, ranging from $100 to $260, were the figures he estimated for a single student.

In addition the temporary plan for student employment, started last fall, will be continued and will make a number of part-time positions available for students living in the houses.

The reductions were from $9 to $8 weekly for board in freshmen dining halls and from $9 to $8.50 weekly in the House dining hall. Room rents in the houses were lowered from an average of $300 to $264. The number of moderately priced rooms was also increased.

his client to make no comment until he thoroughly discussed the statement with her later today.

Mrs. McMahon learned of her husband's statement after the dramatic meeting of accused and accuser in the jail. She was overcome by the shock but forced a smile and comforted her husband with:

"I'm going to try to make it work out all right. It is going to need love and increased faith but I'm going to pray for it."

McMahon to Face Widow on Confession

Dist.-Atty. Hugh A. Cregg and State Detective Richard J. Griffin planned today to confront Mrs. Costello with the McMahon statement as soon as her counsel made arrangements for presence at the interview.

Further information given them by McMahon may also lead to the arrest, at least as a material witness of the mysterious man he cited as the object of Mrs. Costello's affection.

McMahon declined early today to enlarge upon his revelations.

"I'm in a hot spot. I have nothing more to say. I wouldn't say any more anyway unless I had a lawyer handy," he told the Boston Evening American.

State Detective Griffin, Police Chief Edward Pierce and Dist.-Atty. Hugh A. Cregg conferred with McMahon for two days before the confession was written out.

$5000 Insurance Check on Way to Widow

"I believe the story to be true," said Griffin early today.

The much-discussed insurance of $5000 on the dead fire captain, has been released by the New York office of the company and an attachment that had been placed against it has also been released. The check should reach the widow within a few days.

Receipt of the money will automatically prevent defense counsel from demanding that the state provide funds for the defense of Mrs. Costello. Counsel announced during the past few days they would demand state funds for hire of mental experts and toxicologists.

The Test of Hitler's Fitness to Rule

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American.

Claude G. Bowers

WE HAVE HAD in America, for some time, groups of rather "precious" people, mostly pluming themselves on the superiority of their intellects, who have jeered incessantly against the American concept of government. These have doubted the desirability of liberty for the masses, and been positive that equality under equitable laws is more or less a curse. They have been sure that what the people need is a master with a whip or sword. Ironically enough, if such a master comes to set aside all human rights, these would be the first to feel the whip and get the sword, for under the form of government they adore they would be unable to jeer at the governing forces as they do here now.

We have an illustration in Germany at this hour.

* * *

Making Laws of the Country

A few days ago the Democratic Republic of Germany passed out—when Hindenburg, yielding to the demands of Hitler, banished the Republican flag and made a scrap of paper of the Democratic constitution.

A program has now been announced which makes one man and his little group the law makers of a great nation. They may make the laws as they see fit and enforce them with the sword if need be.

To enforce the decrees of a masterful government that need not consult the people, concentration camps are to be established in Bavaria, since spokesmen of the new regime announce that there are not nearly enough jails and prisons in Germany for the incarceration of political prisoners.

Meanwhile our own "precious" groups will be glad to know that the freedom of speech and the liberty of the press have been suppressed.

* * *

Persecution of Jewish People

There have been some interesting scenes in Berlin associated with distinguished figures who are an honor to the German nation and are well known in this country. On Sunday, Hitler's men made a raid on the home of Einstein. The pretext was that the house was packed with arms and ammunition. Of course, nothing of the sort was found. The raiders triumphantly carried away—a bread knife!

A few days before a raid had been made on the home of Lion Feuchtwanger, who is one of the glories of contemporary German literature. The manuscript of a half-finished novel, and manuscripts of other writers that had been submitted to the criticism of the master, were taken away and destroyed.

The real explanation for these two raids is that both these men are Jews. It is no longer possible to ignore the fact that one of the purposes of the new regime of masterful men is the persecution of the Jewish people. Hitler does not have the same opinion of the Jewish intellect that Bismarck had.

* * *

A Serious Situation

It seems incredible from this distance that Hindenburg is in sympathy with or responsible for the acts of violence that have marred the triumph of Hitler. It is the opinion of Lion Feuchtwanger that Hitler personally had nothing to do with it. It may be the old story of a private army fired by fanaticism and hate being turned loose upon a peace-loving population. It is bad for Germany, and Germany deserves something better.

Just what is the effect?

I, for one, resented the propaganda of war days picturing the Germans as a race of savages delighting in the torture of women and children. I had never seen anything savage or inhuman in the Germans I had known. So with many others. But the majority of people in the midst of war are quite ready to ascribe any infamy to the enemy. Thus when the war came to an end the average American was calling the Germans "Huns and vandals."

Then when our army of occupation marched into Germany and met the Germans face to face, and in their homes, a reaction set in. The soldiers knew that the Germans had been lied about.

Then came the establishment of a democratic republic, and that was reassuring to the world. And out of it came some fine figures, like Stresemann, who, unlike those in charge of foreign affairs just before, and during, the war, understood the psychology of the world beyond the German borders.

And then the German people, with an intolerable burden on their backs, set their teeth, and uncomplainingly settled down to work—hard work, long days. A wave of sympathy and admiration swept over the world.

A casual reading of the world press shows that within ten days Germany outside her borders has lost much that she had gained. Again we read in editorials that the Germans are incapable of understanding world psychology. Again we hear people saying, apropos of the mobbing of Jews, the bitter things uttered in the midst of the war.

And Gilbert Chesterton in savage satire returns with zest to the old time denunciation of "Prussianism" and makes it synonymous with Germanism.

Meanwhile, throughout the outside world, the medieval persecution of the Jews in Germany is being savagely denounced, and no friend of Germany can think with satisfaction of the hostile reactions of the world.

* * *

Government's Duty to Prevent Crime

There is a disposition to exonerate Hitler and the government over which Hindenburg presides of actual complicity in these outrages against the Jews.

The author of "Josephus" exonerates him.

The German Zionist federation, whose headquarters were raided, is quite sure the raid was "not authorized by the authorities."

But assuming this to be true, it is hardly enough. It never is enough that government does not authorize a crime; it is the duty of government to prevent it if possible, and if impossible to prevent it, to punish the culprits.

If the followers of Hitler in brown shirts are beyond the control of their leader and government, then Germany must be in a state of anarchy. For if hundreds of thousands of men are able to run amuck without molestation merely because they wear brown shirts, international complications of the gravest character are not only possible, but probable.

To illustrate: America cannot be indifferent when a mob, presumably with governmental sanction, assaults an American citizen in Berlin.

If Hitler's men are running amuck he will understand the necessity of taking them in hand, and it is impossible to associate the presidency of Hindenburg with a reign of anarchy.

* * *

Friends of Peace Deeply Concerned

Thus Germany enters the picture of the possibilities of another and a final war for the wiping out of our present civilization. Other nations have figured in the picture for some time; only recently has Germany entered.

The favorite indoor sport today appears to be to align the nations into two camps in preparation for another war. Some statesmen are figuring, too, and Arthur Henderson properly calls them the "general staff of hell."

Since we have not been able to liquidate the last war some people want another to liquidate a civilization that is incapable of a peaceable adjudication of international differences.

At the moment, the friends of peace are deeply concerned over the disturbing events in Germany, and if these events are not in accord with Hitler's purpose, the world speedily will pass judgment on his capacity to rule or what he does to end them.

MONTROSS SUIT DECISION SOON

New York, March 22 (AP)—Supreme Court Referee Thomas W. Churchill reserved decision in a divorce action brought by Mrs. Lois S. Montross.

Frank Keyser, a radio engineer, testified he drove the husband, Lynn Montross, to Woodstock, Vt., last summer and later received a letter from him saying "I have moved to a ducky little place at Saxton's River, where I hope to recuperate my fortune, my health and my love life."

Keyser said he went up for a visit and found Montross with two cats, a cow and a woman he identified as Eleanor Hart. Last December, Keyser said, he again visited Montross, at Hartford, Ct., this time accompanied by Mrs. Montross. Mrs. Montross, herself a writer, seeks no alimony.

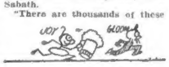
radical wet measure, gained support when Sabath insisted it would save the government millions of dollars by reducing the cost of operating the prisons.

"I am hopeful President Roosevelt will free these prisoners, convicted of violating a law that Congress now has repealed," said Sabath.

"There are thousands of these prisoners in jail. If we free them, we will save the government millions of dollars."



The government, meanwhile, was preparing to license manufacturers and brewers of the beverages to be legalized. Thousands of licenses were being printed, as were revenue stamps. Brewers will have to pay $1000 for the license and the federal tax will be $5 per barrel of 31 gallons.

It will apply to beer, porter, ale, wine, other fermented malt or vinous liquors or fruit juices with not over 3.2 per cent alcohol.

STONE ADMITS SELLING BONDS, TAKING FEE

Judge Arthur P. Stone admitted under cross-examination at the legislative hearing on the petition to oust him that as administrator of the estate of Genevieve Clark he sold her Liberty bonds for $1850, paid bills amounting to $618 and kept the balance of $1232 as pay for his services.

Rep. McDonald—This was three days after your appointment as administrator on Feb. 24, 1930, was it not? A.—Yes.

Q.—Why did you sell those Liberty bonds? A.—Because they were the only means available at the time to raise cash which I needed to pay certain bills for hospital treatment and the funeral of Genevieve Clark. I had grown tired of paying bills out of my own pocket and wished to reimburse myself for services rendered.

HAS NO RECORD

Q.—Did you think Genevieve Clark was indebted to you to the extent of $1200? A.—I felt I was entitled to more for what I had done. I might have charged $2,000 and it would not have been excessive.

Q.—You testified that you conferred with Inez Clark, sister of Genevieve, about the sale of these Liberty bonds and that she assented? A.—Yes.

Q.—Can you show me anything in your records as to what comment Inez Clark made on the subject? A.—No, only my recollection. I recall that I explained to Inez Clark that I needed cash.

Q.—Did you consider $1200 a fair charge? A.—If I had taken it all without paying any bills from the proceeds of the Liberty bonds the amount would still be well under what she owed me.

Q.—Under your power of administrator you had the right to withdraw money and sell bonds and other securities? A.—Yes.

Q.—You were opposed to the reopening of the Genevieve Clark account, weren't you, and accepted such a decree only after constant objection? A.—That is hardly a fair statement.

WANTED IT CLOSED

Here Rep. McDonald read from the transcript of the hearing before Judge Legget in Middlesex probate court showing that Judge Legget informed Judge Stone that he could not consent to allow the account as submitted by Judge Stone and added:

"It is incumbent on you to correct these errors."

Q—So you did not voluntarily asent to a re-opening? A—No, I didn't because I didn't want the matter re-opened.

Rep. Logan—As I recall your testimony, you stated that you had been paid in full by the Clarks up to July 11, 1929? A—Yes, all but the Reall suit which I considered a running account.

Q—You testified that of 110 items in your diary you had been paid for 72, as I recall it? A—Yes, there were small matters I had attended to but had not been paid for. I considered them water which had gone under the bridge.

TWO IDENTIFY 'KING KONG' BEAUTY

HYMAN FINN "KING KONG" BEAUTY ALBERT SARGENT

Tie was declared between Hyman Finn, 6 Glenbourne st., Roxbury (left), and Albert Sargent, 33 Conant st., Roxbury. Both are unemployed. Picture shows "King Kong" mystery beauty paying reward money to her captors on the second day of the Boston hunt.

"King Kong" Beauty Defies Amateur Sleuths

Mystery Girl Walks Along Tremont St. Today

The second day's reward for "capturing" the Boston American "King Kong" Mystery Beauty was divided by two entertaining Roxbury youths, who, though total strangers to each other, identified her the same instant.

According to her schedule, published in yesterday's Boston American, the "King Kong" Mystery Beauty alighted from a taxi in front of the City Hall on School st. a few minutes past 12. Her searchers were out in numbers.

Before she could step inside the building she was surrounded by a group of people who were there to "capture" her in the manner described in the rules.

Hyman Finn and Albert Sargent simultaneously spoke to the "King Kong" Mystery Beauty using exactly the words given in the rules of the "hunt." Though many others were on the scene to win the $25 reward these two young men were first.

TODAY'S TIP

Today the "King Kong" Mystery Beauty will attempt to walk along Tremont st., from Scollay sq. to Boylston st., without being recognized.

TOMORROW'S TIP

Tomorrow she will visit the RKO Keith Theater on Washington st., where the new movie thriller, "King Kong," opens with a special Hollywood premiere on Friday night at 11 o'clock. Her visit will take place between noon and 3 p. m. If not "captured" at the RKO Keith Theater she will proceed down Washington st.

Visit to RKO Keith's on Her Program Tomorrow

The "King Kong" Mystery Beauty will wear the same outfit every day this week while the hunt is on. Her picture appears every day in the Boston American. Try to remember her face and pick her out from the crowds.

AGAIN, WE SAY . . . READ THE RULES CAREFULLY. Failure to follow them exactly while making the "capture" of the "King Kong" Mystery Beauty will disqualify you at once.

KING KONG RULES

Read the rules and pick up the trail.

RULE NO. 1—No one connected with the Boston Evening American or the RKO-Keith Theater will be eligible to make a "capture."

RULE NO. 2—You MUST have a current copy of the Boston Evening American in your hand when you approach the girl you believe to be the "King Kong" Mystery Beauty.

RULE NO. 3—Do not grab her, but simply say: "You are the 'King Kong' Mystery Beauty, for whose capture the Boston Evening American offers a reward of $25."

Just say that and nothing more.

If you have followed these rules and you address the right girl she will acknowledge her identity and take you to the office of the Boston Evening American where you will receive the $25 at once.

In case there is no "capture" on any one day, the reward for the following day will be increased that much.

True to Type ◆ Despair of Doomsters Proves Roosevelt's Power

By GILBERT SELDES

During the last months of the campaign I was working on a book intended for publication in February; my difficulty was to avoid the heats of argument and to hold to some balance in judging the two candidates. In November, one of the publisher's advisers told him I had written a political speech in favor of Franklin D. Roosevelt, but three months later it appears that I had been generous to Herbert Hoover whose re-election I privately thought would be an appalling calamity) and that I had under-estimated Franklin D. Roosevelt (whose election I privately thought would save the country from a frightful nervous panic brought on by despair). In the campaign I had discovered and noted one profoundly important speech made by Mr. Roosevelt, the one at the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco, in which he announced the end of the system of unchecked exploitation in America, but I never saw into the mind of the candidate—and still think that he (very properly) cast a veil over his inmost thoughts.

Gilbert Seldes

I have proof now that Mr. Roosevelt was almost universally underestimated. One thing made much of in the campaign was that he never came out specifically against payment of the bonus; and instantly after inauguration he has come out for reduction of payments to able-bodied veterans. Disregarding both the moral and the economic arguments about such payments, we now see that Mr. Roosevelt is capable of astounding decisiveness. The other elements in the new program—the mere projection of half a dozen bills of the highest importance and the widest scope in ten days—are additional evidence.

But the serious proof lies, as always, in the response of the public. In this case I suggest we go not to the friendly mass of people and not even to the political enemies of the President who have rallied nobly (and with astonishment) to his support. I am particularly impressed by the effect of Mr. Roosevelt's program on radicals—on those who were so certain a few short weeks ago that nothing on earth could save the American political and economic system and that quietly or—preferably—by violence we would have to have a change.

Those I have spoken to in the past few days confess that the prospects for a Communist revolution are not rosy. I had always thought they were optimistic and it pleases me to see them acquire a little political realism. They know that any change in government gives at least a momentary hope.

Further: the banks have come out of their tail spin. According to the revolutionaries we should all have lost our faith in money and in the capitalist system the moment all the banks closed. Actually, faith was lost in the preceding weeks and was restored the moment the doors were shut. The days of the moratorium were a great demonstration of the non-revolutionary character of 90 per cent of the American people.

Only one argument is left for those who wish to give us a revolution with Russian dressing. Unemployment does not exist in Russia. It is an effective and important argument and it could have led to infinite trouble if there had been no change in government. I have no direct testimony from jobless men, but I think it is true that for the first time in 18 months they hope again for jobs.

In sum, the enemies of American capitalism testify to a new atmosphere. Most of them I think, would admit that Mr. Roosevelt has, in effect, changed our system in an orderly and inevitable way: capitalism in America ceased, on March 4, to be altogether a private thing and came under the control of the government. The radicals (pessimists about our present system) were sure that if it changed it would have to turn into Communism with the bare possibility of Fascism as a brief interval on the way. Mr. Rosevelt fooled them as completely as he fooled me. Only I am happier than they are.

AIR MONOPOLY IS BALKED BY PARK BOARD

Plans for a "monopoly" of the commercial flying facilities at Boston airport have been frustrated, the Boston Evening American learned today.

Balked by the park commissioners of the city of Boston, the proposed merger of the Ames-Skyways interests with those of Curtiss Air Terminals, has been abandoned.

The history of the proposition started a year ago when the late Frederick Lothrop Ames merged his company with Skyways, occupying two of the four commercial service hangars. American Airways confine their activities, in the fifth hangar to flying mail and passengers.

Before Fred Ames was killed last November 5 at Randolph with two others, he planned to go through with the taking over of the two Curtiss buildings. After his death, negotiations were continued by officials of the company, and were repeatedly thwarted by the park commissioners. Curtiss desired to get out of Boston, and was agreeable to the merger.

For the past four months a "temporary" consolidation has been in effect, and a half dozen individuals or companies, one of them now operating near Boston and another working on the Boston airport, have been trying to get one or both of the Curtiss buildings.

Charles Loos, representing the Curtiss interests, has been in Boston, directing the "unscrambling" of the "temporary" merger.

Companies and individuals occupying space in either of the two latter buildings have been notified that Ames-Skyways liability ends with the last day of this month. They are advised to make new arrangements with the Curtiss company.

Curtiss officials haven't decided officially as yet whether they'll return to business here, or lease their property. A final decision will be reached in a few days.

Reformers in First Score

—By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER—

They're going to turn loose the amber flood. And, goodness, how we dread it.

The whiskey tenor will recover his lost voice. The horrible example will mount the platform and point with pride to his own wreckage that strews the right-of-way.

The Anti-Saloon League will enlarge its complaint department. The survivors of 13 years of bootleg will demand citations and congressional beer caps.

The teetotalist lecturer, who talked himself out of a job in 1920, will hop to the mike and try to talk himself out of another one.

We will be exactly where we were in the good old days with one exception. Then, you couldn't buy beer unless you were 21. Now they're aiming to make it 16.

So, that's a victory for the reformers after all. They've knocked five years off the stein song.

CROWD STONES SHOE WORKERS

Derry, N. H., March 22 (AP)—Nine autos bearing approximately 50 Manchester persons allegedly employed in Lawrence, Mass., shoe factories where a strike is in progress, were stoned and snowballed last night by a crowd of 500 Derry residents.

The autos were under a police escort when the attack occurred, but no arrests were made.

One car, halted by a traffic light, was quickly surrounded, and a free-for-all battle started. It ended just as sharply, however, when the driver went ahead, despite the traffic light.

ALLEN PAINTING PLACED

The new portrait of former Gov. Frank G. Allen is now on exhibition in the executive council room at the State House. It takes the place of the canvas previously rejected by the art commission. Those who have seen both pictures and have known the former governor, outside of the art commission of course, prefer the first one with its cheerful smile even if the hands were in the trouser pockets.

Roosevelt Moves to Force Adoption of Drug Pact

Washington, March 22 (US)—Dealing the European drug cartel a smashing blow, the Roosevelt administration apparently has saved the Geneva anti-narcotics treaty.

Private advices to the State Department indicate sufficient ratifications from European manufacturing countries will be forthcoming to bring the treaty into effect this summer.

Signed at Geneva two years ago and ratified last year by the United States, the treaty, limiting drug manufacture to the world's medical needs, was threatened with failure because of opposition of dope manufacturers.

Under terms of the treaty, 25 countries, including four of the leading manufacturing nations, must ratify before April 13. So far only 13 countries have ratified or authorized ratification. With the deadline drawing near, pressure has been applied, notably in France, Great Britain and Switzerland, where large dope factories are located, to secure ratification.

Reports from abroad have encouraged administration officials who are determined to wipe out the illicit dope traffic. It is now the reported plan of European nations to deposit their ratifications simultaneously during the first week in April. Between 25 to 30 nations are counted upon to ratify.

If this procedure is followed, the treaty will come into force in July. In opinion of American officials it will mark the greatest forward step yet taken against the dope evil.

THE PUPPET SHOW IS AS MUCH a part of the life of children in foreign countries as Santa Claus and the Christmas tree . . . and we think it was a rare treat to be priviledged to sit through the hilarious and clever performance of "The Piccoli" at the Plymouth Theater Monday evening . . . it was The American Theater Society's last offering of the season . . .

Every child who can should be taken to see these astounding and amusing caricatures . . . perhaps Vittorio Podrecca, who is the father of these animated little creatures, may not come this way again until they are grown up . . . perhaps never, who knows! Not to have seen them will leave an artistic gap in their lives which may always be regretted . . .

MRS. ANDREW J. WINSLOW, JR.

We were all children again as we roared with laughter at their antics . . . the comedies and tragedies in the life of a puppet seems so poinant . . . one weeps or laughs so easily with them . . .

There were so many excrutiatingly delightful bits of pantomime, we find it hard to select the most enjoyable, but we think the bull fight has the edge on the others . . . or maybe it was the concert party . . . we were almost forgetting Salome, she was too marvelous . . . we felt more closely drawn to her than if she had been a live person, her smile was too wonderful . . . but what is the use of trying to make you see them with words, they are indescribable and must have been the work of a lifetime of love and patience . . .

* * *

Smart Audience at Premiere

EVERYONE IN THE SMART audience seemed to think so, too . . . we saw all our first-night friends . . . you know, these American Theater Society openings are like one big family party, so intimate and informal . . . Rebekah Hobbs and her mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Hobbs brought a large party of guests with them, among whom was Marchesa della Chiuse, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Neale, Jr., and Mr. Gardiner Morse. Miss Hobbs looked adorable in a blonde lace frock . . . too dainty to be styled a GOWN . . . with chiffon petals outlining the armsides; she carried a darling little muff made of the chiffon petals . . .

Quite regal in sapphire blue velvet with silver bodice, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller was accompanied by her friend, Mrs. Robert Sylvester, whose lame gown was very smart . . .

The young Andrew J. Winslows, Jr., were on hand, as usual, her dress of black velvet quite distnctively cut . . . her corsage was of velvety gardenias . . .

* * *

Isabelle Grandin in Maroon Velvet

ISABELLA GRANDIN WORE A chic gown of maroon velvet with lei of beige ostrich feathers . . . quite startling . . .

It was nice to see a headliner of two seasons ago, Lilla Draper, in a red dress with black fur coat . . . she was with a good-looking swain, of course . . .

The Misses King of Beacon Hill came in with a party of ten and Mrs. Harold Russell brought a party of five dinner guests . . .

We saw Prof. H. W. L. Dana and Mr. and Mrs. Channing Cox . . . Mrs. Matthew John Whittall, Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm French, Mr. and Mrs. T. Jefferson Newbold and many others in the large throng which packed the house . . .

* * *

Alice Merriam Among Models

AT THE FASHION SHOW at Chez Madelaine's Monday afternoon we glimpsed Mrs. Ralph W. Gray, who watched her attractive daughter, Alice Merriam, as one of the bridesmaids in the bridal party with interest . . . we saw her take down the number of the pale pink satin evening gown which Mrs. John Buttrick was showing . . . perhaps Alice will be "briding" it some day soon, who knows?

Phebe Russell

Mrs. Robert Treat Paine, around with umbrella and galoshes, attended . . . as did Mrs. Lawrence Coolidge and her sister, Miss Mildred Titus, who stayed to the very end .

Helen and Mary Curtis (Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Curtis' titian-haired daughters) came in from Concord with Mrs. Page Brown and Mrs. Stedman Buttrick . . .

Mrs. William T. Snow and Mrs. J. C. Nowell, Jr., whispered in a corner . . .

Mrs. Benjamin F. W. Russell and her daughter, Phebe, calculated together . . .

Mildred Hockstader of New York, who is on visiting her sister, Mrs. Ralph Kellogg, was there to watch her sister model in the stunning new cape suits . . .

* * *

Mrs. Franklin Hobbs to Entertain

MR. AND MRS. GUY WARREN WALKER (meet the Baroness), Mr. and Mrs. Charles French, Miss Mabel W. Daniels, Mr. Franklin Hobbs, Jr., Dr. Frederick Jack will be guests of Mrs. Franklin Hobbs at dinner preceding the Ruth Posselt violin concert at Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller's beautiful house on Beacon st. . . .

* * *

All of the dances this week for society folk will be in costume . . . the Tuesday evenings, the Wednesday evenings and the Friday and Saturday evenings for the sub-debutantes at the Hotel Somerset, as well as the Junior Supper dance at the Hotel Statler on Friday evening . . .

Have you heard that Bill Warner of Milton is going over on the Wanderbird as first mate this summer? . . . Bill plays the piano-accordion, which should be a great addition to the cruise . . . the E. SOCIETY FLOCKS TO CARNIVAL

WARREN D. ROBBINS, JR. BEATRICE DE MENOCAL

MISS BEATRICE DE MENOCAL, popular member of society's young set, and Mr. Warren D. Robbins, Jr., snapped as they chatted between dances at a recent social event. Miss de Menocal, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel A. de Menocal of Beacon st., was a star in the recent "Vincent Ventures." She is also a prominent Junior Leaguer.

Leaders to Attend Event at Boston Garden

One of the big society events of the month will be the Ice Carnival tonight at Boston Garden in aid of the Boston Emergency Relief Campaign.

This carnival will consist of three events as well as a splendid program of music. Two hockey games will be played, one between the Bruins and the pick of players of Harvard, Yale, Princeton and other leading institutions of learning, while the second match will be a high school classic with leading stars of the Greater Boston Interscholastic League opposing an all-star team of the Bay State League.

The skating exhibition has been arranged through the courtesy of Mr. Charles M. Rotch, president of the Skating Club of Boston.

Mr. Huntington R. Hardwick, former Harvard athlete, is chairman of the committee in charge of the affair, and Mr. Fred Hoey will be master of ceremonies.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Joseph Gilman, president of the Boston Garden Corp., the Garden has been placed at the disposal of the committee free of all charges.

Among the many boxholders are Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, Mrs. Jefferson Coolidge, Mrs. Harold J. Coolidge, Mrs. H. P. Kidder, Mrs. Thomas S. Bradlee, Mrs. Charles M. Rotch, Mrs. George L. DeBlois, Mrs. Ellery Sedgwick, Mr. and Mrs. James Phelan, Mr. and Mrs. Paul F. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Herrick, Mrs. John S. Ames, Mrs. Robert E. Emmons, Mrs. J. Wells Farley, Mrs. E. W. Grew, Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall, Mrs. George S. West, Mrs. S. E. Guild, Jr., Mrs. R. W. Bird, and many others.

Points About the Fashionables

By Dorothy Whipple Fry

Among those seen at the opening of "The Piccoli" at the Plymouth was Miss Isabelle Grandin in a resplendent white coat over a gown of black lace trimmed with ecru ostrich feathers. She was escorted by Mr. George Henderson.

Mrs. Harold Russell of Brookline was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. William Amersun, and her grandson, Mr. Theodore Amersun, who is home from Brook's school for the spring holidays. Mrs. Russell wore a black evening gown covered by a Chinese brocade cape. Mrs. Amersun wore a turquoise velvet under a sable coat.

Mrs. Levi Greenwood who is exhibiting her printings at Grace Horne's Galleries was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Ralph Hornblower, wearing a flesh and yellow frock under a squirrel coat and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Richard Greenwood in a Zeire satin black frock with huge puffy sleeves. Her black cloth coat was trimmed with light fox.

After the theater we repaired to the Egyptian room of the Brunswick, where a gay and festive group of young people met after the theater.

Mr. Jack Crickard, who had escorted Miss Eleonora Sears to the opening night of Ethel Barrymore's play, arrived with Mr. Ted Cole, who had just finished his performance in "The Red Mill" at the Copley.

Miss Rose Stearn, who has suddenly burst into the dramatic limelight, tells us she simply loves it, appear at the Brunswick wearing a gay and glamorous frock of two-toned grey plaid. She was accompanied by Mr. Cushman Clapp.

BOOKS---And a Number of Things

By Charles Hanson Towne

Volumes of verse comes less frequently from the press in these stormy times of depression. They are a luxury, and few publishers have the temerity to risk money on such ventures

Yet we need poetry more than ever; for the poets can tell us, better than the writers of prose, that the eternal things go on; that the stars still sing and shine; that the seasons move along in a bright procession.

Dorothy Aldis has the courage to come forward with her first collection of serious verse, which she calls "Any Spring" (Minton, Balch & Co.). Here are the lyrics of tenderness and grace, unaffected and simple. In such lines as these she evokes a scene with good effect It is entitled "Summer Moment":

"Creak on the road.
A high hay rick,
The driver whittling a willow stick
Reaching a puddle
Down lunges his wheel,
And the old horse pauses
Liking the feel
Of feet in water;
A slap on the back
Of reins that are gentle
And pleasantly slack,
Urges him on
Down the summer sweet lane
(Hay all in and it didn't rain)
And wavering a little
The grasses and trees,
The clouds and the daisies—all of these
Slip back in the puddle again."

Also I like a dainty fancy such as this:

"The apple trees
Seem like guests in the garden,
Longing only for the right moment
To lift their white skirts
And walk down the road and leave me."

Mrs. Aldis has published two volumes of verse and two of prose for children, and her more serious poems have appeared from time to time—all too seldom, I think—in the best magazines. One can only hope that she will give us another collection of her songs.

Katharine Brush is one of the shrewdest commentators we have on the modern scene. She makes her people live. In all her short stories there are felicitous observations. Nothing is too trivial to escape her notice.

For instance, in her newest collections, "Other Women" (Farrar & Rinehart), she has this to say in the opening story, called "Ladies and Lipsticks," which concerns some events in the life of Louise Bartlett:

"The bathroom was red and white, which was certainly different enough for you, and the dining room was fixed up like a bar. Mr. Henry Peterson—Hen—who delivered for the Renwood Ice Company, was authority for the statement that in Irene Legendre's icebox there was hardly ever anything to speak of, you might say, except bottles of White Rock and bottles of gingerale. Asked if he had ever seen any intoxicating liquor there, Hen shook his head. 'But take it from me,' he said slyly, 'there's drinkin' goes on. Ice don't melt away that fast just sittin' in the box—no ma'am.'"

STUFFED LOBSTER

2 lobsters
3 tablespoons butter
4 fresh or 12 canned mushrooms
¾ cup cream or rich milk
1½ tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons grated American cheese

To butter, add mushrooms cut in small pieces and the lobster meat. Fry for a few minutes. Cover this with the cream and cook five minutes. Add the flour, stirred with a little milk to the lobster to thicken the mixture. Fill the empty shells with this and sprinkle the grated cheese on top. Brown in the oven. If this is used for an entree for a dinner, the shells may be broken into four pieces, the lobsters split across, and upper and lower halves separated. Two lobsters will make eight such portions.

SHORT AND SNAPPY ADVERTISING MESSAGES ON FUTURE RADIO PROGRAMS

Abbreviated Selling Talk on Air During Major Broadcasts After April First

By N. F. T.

Rejoice all ye faithful followers of the air artistry!

On and after the not far distant day when folks have fun fooling one another about this and that, there is to be a shortening of the long-winded loudspeaker lung practice with which the willing but weary waves have been so deliberately deluged to date. Believe it, good friends, for it's true. American sponsors of big broadcasting studios shows don't want to do without the valued Canadian listener clientele, therefore they must make their "mike" messages short and snappy. Beginning April 1, those new and rigid radio commercial restrictions take effect in Canada.

Appreciative America

Five per cent of program time is all the law allows for said sales talk. As set forth here previously, that means three minutes out of every 60 during which to tell about the merits of merchandise. It also means, thanks to high heaven and our Canadian cousins, relief from a lot of razzle-dazzle heretofore at large within our own boundaries. Ten major programs originating in the United States are reported now cutting down to conform with limitations laid down.

* * *

Among these top 10 is the much made of "Magic Carpet" hour holding forth from coast to coast and over into Canada each week. Three 30-second announcements are to be allotted, in addition to the usual opening and closing signatures. Nine other foremost features will follow suit according to advices. On the opposite five fingered arm appendage, these same enterprising backers of bank music, baritones, crooners and costly comedians, may break loose and blaze away like a filibustering statesman between now and then. It should be most interesting to observe what happens by the clock during the 10 days and nights to come.

* * *

THIS EAR—THAT AIR

Members of the Roosevelt Cabinet will take a weekly network turn to talk governmental affairs beginning Monday night (WEEI), April 9. Secretary of the Treasury Woodin comes first...Jack (Baron Munchausen) Pearl says he bids his famous "Baron" hit bye-bye when he takes his summer layoff on June 22. Returning Oct. 5, he has in mind doing another type of character not yet decided upon. German dialect stays, of course, and he's wide open to suggestion....Tony Wons paid a pretty tribute to his deceased pet pup named Patsy (WAAB) yesterday morning. This was the homeless dog he found on New York streets and befriended. An auto killed it while Tony was headed for Chicago, with Mrs. Wons reluctant to write or wire what took place. When she did, Tony swallowed hard...Such a time as the broadcasters had deciding what time to put that German Reichstag program on yesterday! After much telegraphing and schedule juggling, the Boston NBC outlet (WEEI) didn't hook in at all, because 6:15 p. m. was the third word sent them as the set spot. If it was anything like numerous former trans-Atlantic airings, we didn't miss much...However, don't let 8:30 tonight slip along without hearing Mr. Edward A. Filene, the New England retail merchant mogul, when he interprets "A New Deal in Business and Politics" through WBZ-WBZA waves. What Mr. Filene says sticks...Edwin C. Hill certainly hauled off on the air and whacked Soviet Russia a few wicked wallops Monday night (WAAB) at 10:30, incidentally giving out some smart inside info on the "Secret Police" of Moscow...Jack Shannon and Marie Stoddard (The Gossipers) are making a downtown lunch hour personal appearance tomorrow between 12:30 and 2 o'clock at 19 School st., which is one of the eating places owned by their sponsors...Program Chief John (WBZ) Clark, ill at his Milton home, also missed aplenty around Hotel Bradford sound sanctums...What's become of "Pat" Henry, the blonde Virginia gal orchestra directress, heard such a lot of a while back there?...Two of many fair "colyum" patrons down Plymouth way want to know if Yankee network staff men, Knox Manning and Roland Winters, are bachelors. What is this, romance? Well, the former was getting ready not to be the last heard of his plans, while the latter happens among the happiest of handsome Hub hubbies in captivity—so there!

THE "FLU" OF 1918

It should be remembered that when the epidemic of "Flu" broke out in Boston in 1918 the U. S. Surgeons on the Receiving Ship, where the first case in this country occurred, and later the physicians on duty at all the Massachusetts State Camps, under the direction of the Surgeon-General, used Salicon both in the treatment of the disease and as a preventive.

During the prevalence of "Flu" and colds it is advisable to take, every night, two Salicon tablets as a possible preventive.

Daily True Story
Love 'Takes' a Holiday

THE WEEK that just passed into history will be remembered as much for the spirit and gallantry in which the people of this country met hte financial dilemma as for the fact that there was a crisis during which all the banks of the nation were closed.

And the real people that carried this thing through were the simple souls—the ordinary type—the laborer and the white collar worker and the stenographer. These were the ones who exhibited the true courage, the confidence in the American system and the patience to wait watchfully.

A party was going on in the home of Merna Borden—it was already long past midnight—and the dancing alternated to the tune of long distance radio stations and the shrill staccato of a victrola. The party was not unlike hundreds of others—where drinks and sandwiches are modestly served and couples exchange amorous glances.

Merna was dancing with Jim Fargon. She was trying to teach him a novel step, although she knew very well she would not succeed. For Jim has not even succeeded in learning the old and tried movements of the modern dance. But when a girl is blinded by the poisoned arrows of cupid—she believes in the impossible.

EXTRAS OUT

Suddenly the air was rent by the piercing voice of a newsboy. "Wuxtra! Wuxtra!" The rest of the sentence faded into a meaningless jargon. But the voice was insistent and assertive, as if he had some important wares to sell. Finally, someone pulled up the window and summoned the newsboy. He rushed up with the papers spread in his hands—and the news was known. A bank holiday had been declared by the President of the United States.

For a moment a pall of silence fell upon the party. Some of the more avid newspaper readers hurriedly ran through the columns of type. Occasionally, one or the other cast a glance at Jim Fargon. For Jim was employed by a banking house. And occasionally someone cast a glance at Merna.

The silence did not last long. One of the girls walked over to the victrola and placed a record on the wheel. One by one—they ceased looking over the paper and began to dance. Within a few minutes, dancing feet and weid cacophony of the victrola had drowned out the memory of the so-called "holiday."

Merna was swinging in the arms of Jim. "We'll talk about it later," she remarked. "I'm the hostess and I don't want the party to wind up a flop . . ."

Drinks were served again, and the usual wisecracking went on. Old jokes were refurbished, given new applications and the party was merry. Suddenly one of the boys turned to Jim.

"Jim," he asked, "what does it all mean?"

"Swell idea," countered one of the girls. "I'm for a holiday at least once a month."

A SWELL IDEA

"I got an idea. If Jim doesn't have to go to work tomorrow, and since Merna doesn't work (anyways when she doesn't want to as Merna operated her own public stenography office and had had little business in recent days)—then it's a swell time for them to get married," exclaimed another.

Merna blushed so palpably that she had to hide her face in her hands. Jim was taking it in his stride—good humoredly.

"A marvelous idea," he replied, "and I hope Merna agrees with it. But what will we do for money? After all—one must spend on a honeymoon even if one goes no further south than Atlantic City or Lakewood. And, as you folks know, the banks will be closed—and I won't even be able to borrow money from the President."

"That's easily solved," cried another. "Let every one at the party chip in. That will be our wedding present."

The chorus was soon taken up. Every one was talking at the same time. Merna stopped the tumult.

"Please, don't make it as cheap as all that. But I'll prove I'm game. I don't believe this country is going to the dogs or anywhere near there. And I have enough faith in Jim — and the banking system—to marry him—this morning. The honeymoon can wait until summer-time."

"Bravo," yelled the crowd in one voice. Thata girl!"

ALL CHIP IN

Now it was Jim's time to redden. "A very good idea," he stammered. Then, smiling bravely: "But to tell the truth, I've been caught so short-handed—I haven't even the money for a marriage license."

"Oh," cried one of them, "well—Merna will permit us to chip in for that . . ."

The party continued all night until long after dawn. Then, all together repaired to the license bureau and saw Merna Borden become Mrs. Jim Fargon.

And the worst of it was that they all had to report to work that same day, including Jim. Because holiday or otherwise—business continued as usual—even behind the closed bank portals.

THIS IS LIFE

Stage Training Makes Famed Ethel Barrymore Stand Out on Radio

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

The other evening I happened to hear Ethel Barrymore in what I was informed was her first radio program. As a program it was not a world beater; a little reminiscence, a good deal of soft soap by the announcer, and a couple of the most effective scenes of her old thriller, "Declassee."

R. E. ROGERS

But what was interesting—and even startling—was the well remembered voice, heard once again after all these years and, particularly, after all these radio voices. It brought home to the listener the realization of everything the stage means that the radio can never mean, nor even the talking pictures—except under the perfection of technical conditions which do not yet obtain.

It is not a beautiful voice, as measured by such a voice as Julia Marlowe's in her prime. It is throaty and breathless and placed too high. But oh, but it had authority! It rang out with all the hard won experience of an actress who had spent her life "plastering her voice on the back wall of the second balcony"—so that no one in the house need miss a word.

Real Acting Takes a Real Voice

It may be said that the radio does not need that kind of voice, that such a voice is bad for the radio. I understand that radio artists are told nowadays that they may whisper, if they like, that the machinery will take care of amplifying them properly. That probably accounts for the crooners and all the soft-spoken announcers and the professional radio actors. Amateurs, of course, can't learn that and so their voices ring out with an energy that is good to hear. Better that, though, than the unendurable squeals of Gracie and Tessie and all their imitators.

What I was getting at is that real acting takes voice. It needs elbow room, something to echo in, something to reverberate in, if it is going to make its proper effect on the spinal cord and the short hairs at the base of the skull. And the production of that voice takes years and years of constant playing, in every kind of theater, under all sorts of conditions, with all kinds of acoustics and audiences to contend with.

Compare Miss Barrymore's voice with that of so many of the young girls on the stage today. Many of them have had no proper kind of training to begin with. Many of them have had only a few intermittent engagements . . . in the terrible hit-or-miss condition of the theater business today . . . small parts in short runs in small theaters. It is not to be expected that they will have mastered the art of the voice, either the women or the men. That is probably why so many of our younger professional actors of today are hardly indistinguishable from good amateurs.

There is a theatrical cult today which implies that a good amateur is really superior to an experienced professional. Birth and breeding, a college education, intelligence, and a little experience in a fashionable seaside theater on the Cape, are considered equivalent to the long professional training an actor once had to endure before he was considered competent. That famous and much disputed word of Walter Pritchard Eaton still holds good: "The worst professional actor is better than the best amateur."

Old Troupers—Barrymore and Cohan

We are lucky enough this week to have in town another member of the profession whose career, like Miss Barrymore's, is an education in itself George M. Cohan and Miss Barrymore, old troupers of a generation's experience—and more. True, neither of them yet can boast the 60 years on the stage that was the career of good old Jefferson D'Angelis, who died a day or two ago. But it is over 30 years since I first saw George M. Cohan and his blessed family down at the old Boston Museum below the King's Chapel Burying Ground on Tremont st. And it could not have been many years later when I first saw Ethel Barrymore as a young star in . . . I think "Captain Jinks."

It is my notion that such an experience pays dividends even when they venture into the alien and unaccustomed territory of the talking films. I can think of no film actress who could have so filled the screen with authority and personality as did Miss Barrymore as the Czarina. You remember the story of the actor in the picture who kissed the Czarina's hand before he kissed the Czar's, and when asked why, replied, "Why, she gets the most money!" I don't believe it. If he did kiss her hand first, it is because she looked every inch imperial—and the Czar didn't.

And at this moment I cannot remember any piece of comedy acting in the films, more easy, more human, more instinctive with the art of entertainment, more ingratiating, than that of George M. Cohan in "The Phantom President." There are good comedians on the screen—but they are screen comedians. Mr. Cohan is something more. Even as a moving photograph in two dimensions he reached out and established a contact with his audience, the contact that only a superlative showman can establish. And, in contrast with the noisy violence of Schnozzle Durante—who is a good showman, too—he did it with the utmost economy of gesture and voice.

Just a Turn of the Shoulder and a Nod

Of course, he hasn't any voice to speak of anyway. A husky, uninflected sort of whisper. But the effects he can get with it are as great as Durante's howlings. Cohan sketches his acting, rather than acts. A half turn of the shoulder, a nod of the head, a lift of the eyes, a half danced step, just the shadow of a dance step,—these are enough for him. And yet they are as sure as death and taxes and a good deal surer than beer.

Nor is Miss Barrymore lively on the stage. Rather a quiet person, as I remember her. She likes to sit quietly, very much the lady—even when the lady is a bit shopworn—and let her eyes and her hands do her acting for her. Those magnificent eyes and those speaking hands. And that strong, clear, throaty, heart-broken voice.

They are two great troupers. Miss Barrymore a trouper in the old legitimate tradition, the grand manner, the tradition of the classics and drawing room comedy, a tradition that you have to begin to learn when your grandmother is young. And Mr. Cohan, a trouper of a tougher, quicker school; the vaudeville act, the comedy of middle class American life, the comedy of bad manners. comedy of middle class American life the comedy of bad manners. In that genre some of our most representative plays have been written by Mr. Cohan, whose touch as an author is no less sure than his touch as an actor.

LEGISLATURE MOVES FOR CITY PAY SLASH

DURKEE AGENT FACES QUIZ IN PROBE

Investors Here Balk Inquiry, Says Dist. Atty. Bishop

Greater Boston investors, alleged to have been swindled in a scheme to press a claim of $113,000,000 against the United States, balked investigators today because they still expressed full confidence in the proposition.

Because of the strange turn Dist.-Atty. Warren L. Bishop, of Middlesex County has experienced difficulty in obtaining details of the alleged scheme that promised returns as high as $100 for every dollar invested.

FAULKNER TO APPEAR

The claim is based on bonds supposed to have been deposited with the United States Treasury Department years ago by the late Gov. Durkee, of Utah, as bond for completion of a trans-continental railroad.

Some details of the proposition are expected to be learned late today when George M. Faulkner, 55, of Commonwealth ave, Brighton, is due to appear before Dist.-Atty. Bishop for questioning. Faulkner has admitted that he was a Boston agent for the proposition.

Another who may be questioned soon is George R. Manchester, of Washington, D. C., possessor of the contract with Administrator Walter W. Hammond, of Kenosha, Wis., for the investigation of the Durkee claim.

Because of charges that nearly $500,000 was collected to finance the legal battle for the Durkee millions, Dist.-Atty. Bishop has appealed to all investors for a recital of the circumstances which led to their investment.

INVESTOR NAMED

He added that many who induced friends to invest might later be termed agents and be subjected to difficulties if the proposition is found to be a fraud.

One of the admitted investors, according to Dist.-Atty. Bishop, is George Turner of Tennyson st., Somerville. Turner refused to state the amount of his investment nor reveal whether fellow employes in a paper concern invested with him.

CAUTION URGED BY PATE

State Commdr. Peter W. Pate, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, has sent a letter to President Roosevelt urging that no veteran receiving compensation for disability incurred in active service be dropped without a thorough physical examination.

A resolution was also presented to Norfolk County Council at Brookline last night protesting against discharge of any veteran receiving permanent hospitalization, against hasty examinations and inaccurate ratings and against reduction in compensation on a percentage for men with service-connected disability.

American Legion officials declined to comment on the situation at the present time. It was stated that they were still studying the new law, which will affect 32,776 veterans in this State.

Guptill Is Named to Malden Post

The appointment of Arthur B. Guptill to the $3500 post of building inspector has again been turned down by the Malden board of aldermen, despite the efforts of Mayor Devir in his behalf. The present incumbent of the post is Clarence S. Doane.

My Boy Franklin

As Told by His Mother to Isabelle Leighton and Gabrielle Forbush

Although Never Having Been to School, Roosevelt Kept Pace With Other Boys

Mrs. James Roosevelt stressed in the previous chapter the fact that though Franklin did not have the same companionship of children of his age as he would have if he had had brothers and sisters then, he enjoyed a rare kind of kinship with older people and a better chance of assimilating adult knowledge. His mother enjoyed telling of his exploit in flooding a field and starting to build a yacht club with his young playmate, Edmund Rogers. He, of course, was the leading spirit, and as in most of his associations with boys, this proved to be his attitude and it was not denied him by the others. He had a propensity for carpentry and, in fact, was never without a hobby of some kind. A visit to the Museum of Natural History was always a treat, such was his fondness for birds and animals.

CHAPTER 4

CLOSE on the heels of the construction program came Franklin's avid interest in naval history. Today he is supposed to have one of the outstanding collections of American naval history, but it had its beginnings in the chest you see here to which he used to bring for safekeeping a button ripped off an officer's coat in action, a miniature brass cannon, or a tarnished bit of braid torn off a battered cap. I can't tell you what any of them mean, but each of them has a history and is a cherished possession.

He always thrilled to tales of the sea, and Mamie used to regale him with stories by the hour. Every once in a while in her desire to make it a yarn well worth hearing, she would draw her imagination and embroider it to a degree that would arouse his suspicion. On one such occasion he let her get clear to the end of the fable, then looked at her in mock severity, for he adored her, and said:

"Mamie, those stories of yours are very interesting stories, but I'm not sure that I always believe them."

His virile, blood-curdling tastes in games and literature were in marked contrast to the little boy I tried futilely to make him. You know, we mothers had daintier ideas along the lines of apparel then than was popular with our sturdy offspring. Looking back I can understand Franklin's rebellion whenever, as a tiny boy, I tried to induce him to wear Scotch kilts and later when, as a concession, I put him into sailor suits. Even over his protest, I still think to this day that he looked very sweet, his little blond curls bobbing under his pancake sailor hat as he ran as fast as ever he could whenever he thought I had designs on combing them.

Eventually he had his way, and they were shorn, oh, long before they should have been, but I still have one of them tucked away — where, I am afraid to disclose, lest he hear of it and, grown as he is, rifle my bureau drawers in an attempt to find and destroy it.

I don't suppose that the way I tried to dress Franklin was consistent with other rules that were laid down for him. Waving locks, in retrospect, do not really go hand-in-hand with the qualities of self-reliance and responsibility that we tried to foster, and we did insist that he accept the full responsibility not only for his every action for his possessions.

Gift of Dog

His dog, for instance. The stipulation that went with permission to accept the gift from his Uncle Warren Delano was that he assume the entire care of Marksman. He was a beautiful red setter and used to follow Franklin about wherever he went. I can see Franklin to this day, carefully picking his steps as he carried the puppy's dinner down to the barn faithfully every day.

And no one knew better than I what a time Franklin had in hiding the self-consciousness he felt when he spoke to any one other than the members of the immediate family. Of course, this was true less of the boys at the stable because they had a subject they both loved in common—the horses. For when Franklin was given his first pony it was also with the understanding that looking after it was his own particular chore. But in a realm where little boys are often entirely at home—to the extent indeed of being a nuisance—he never felt at ease.

When I made the rounds of the house each morning he would go with me, trotting along and chatting over his small affairs. But when he reached the kitchen, he was always stricken dumb. He could hardly be prevailed upon to step over the threshold, so shy was he, and he hid safely behind me when he did, hanging his head and rolling his eyes at the fat, good-natured French cook who tried to coax him out with little broken English endearments. He would not speak a word though, and always seemed relieved when he left that strange and for some reason awe-inspiring territory.

Shows Timidity

Even a proffered cookie jar, often the "open sesame" to a child's heart, did not succeed in overcoming his timidity among people. He was never a boy who could be bribed into good behavior by the promise of candy or cake. And even if he had been I am afraid he would have found very little encouragement on that score from us. He did not consume a great deal of food, but he ate enough and was not "tempery" about his meals. He had no great sweet tooth and did not tease for candy—but then, I think, he discovered early in life that he did not need to nag for anything within reason. We never subjected the boy to a lot of unnecessary don'ts, and while certain rules established for his well being had to be rigidly observed, we never were strict merely for the sake of being strict. In fact, we took a secret pride in the fact that Franklin instinctively never seemed to require that kind of handling. For this I give myself no credit at all. If any outside agency could be said to have been responsible for this quality it was his father, who believed in keeping Franklin's mind on nice things, on a high level; yet he did it in such a way that Franklin never realized that he was following any bent but his own.

Collected Stamps

In consequence the inclinations Franklin developed, even the subjects that intrigued him most, sprang into being as the subconscious result of seeds that were paternally sown. As time went on he acquired a remarkable flair for geography. This he attributed largely to his interest in stamp collecting, a tendency that originated with him, but which was fostered and enjoyed by his father, who

NEW RUM PROBE FOR MALDEN

Rumors of another liquor investigation as a result of one of the largest raids in the history of Malden at a Henry st. house a few days ago, are rife in the Malden city conucil.

A former investigation went before the grand jury and resulted in acquital. It is reported that friends of the parties accused at that time are backing the move for the present investigation and that the investigation may not be confined to the police department alone.

RED HAIR GETS YOUTH IN BAD

Because of his flaming red hair, Francis Campbell, 20, of Sumner pl., Roxbury, faced Roxbury court today with Donald L. Murray, 20, of Boylston st., Jamaica Plain, on charges of two store holdups.

Both, according to police, are members of Roxbury's "Turtle Neck Gang," a name derived from the turtle neck sweaters worn by a group of young hoodlums in that district.

Murray and Campbell, the red hair of the former playing a large part, were identified by Patrick Noonan, manager of a store in Bird st., Roxbury, and Michael J. McLaughlin, manager of a store in Washington st., Jamaica Plain, as two who held them up.

WAGE CUT RIGHT GRANTED MAYOR UNDER BILL

Police, Firemen and Teachers to Be Affected Under Plan

Emergency legislation, which Mayor Curley has declared is necessary before he can reduce municipal salaries, will come before the joint legislative committee on ways and means tomorrow.

The legislation is embodied in the bill of Senator Henry Parkman, Jr., of the Back Bay. The Parkman bill will be given a hearing at 10 a. m. tomorrow before the joint committee.

PERMITS SALARY CUT

The measure would provide for a suspension of civil service restrictions for a period of two years, ending March 31, 1935. It would permit the reduction of salaries of city employes where they are uniform in the same grade or classification. It would allow reduction of teachers' salaries, uniformly, during the school year by the school committee.

It also gives the mayor authority to decree uniform salary reductions for city and county employes. In the cases of county employes and certain city departments, including police, the mayor is to give written notice to department heads and if no action is taken in 10 days, the mayor may make such reductions.

Sen. Parkman stated he would urge speedy adoption of the bill in view of the Mayor's statement that he was prepared to make reductions in the Boston payroll if granted powers held by the police commissioner, school committee and county officers and if the restrictions of civil service and other statutes were removed.

GOODWIN FIGHTS BILL

It was indicated today that the measure would be supported at the hearing by the City Law Department and also by the Chamber of Commerce special committee, headed by Thomas N. Perkins, which asked the mayor to make a $15,000,000 reduction in this year's budget.

Opposition is expected from Chairman Frank Goodwin, of the Finance Commission, in behalf of the Equal Tax League, which includes a large number of Boston's municipal employes.

EVERETT VETS FACE PROBE

Following announcement by Mayor Michael C. O'Neill of Everett that he had asked his secretary, Karl H. Johnson, to investigate and report to him the names of police and firemen drawing disability pay for being physically disabled and were drawing full pay as police and firemen because of being physically able, it was reported that several members of both departments had communicated with Mr. Johnsoan asking what their status would be if they notified the veterans' bureau to discontinue the disability pay.

Inquiry at the veterans' bureau by city officials revealed that two Medford city employes had asked discontinuance of disability allowances within the past week, it was reported to Mr. Johnson.

Just what action Mayor O'Neill will take in the matter is not known and the mayor has declined to make any statement.

Medford to Limit Buses for Children

Transporation for all school children living one and three-tenths miles from an elementary or junior high school in Medford, who can travel part of the distance on existing transportation lines, has been approved by the school committee.

THE VOICE OF BROADWAY

By LOUIS SOBOL

Balm!

One thing is certain: Exit if you must,
Call halt to all that's ever gone before;
Some day you will be one with me and dust,
And things will be exactly as of yore.

Oh, I am flesh and your are flesh and we
Will soon forget; but clay returns to clay,
The earth will make you one again with me,
And we will be as we are yesterday.

So though I sob in anguish as you leave,
And beat my chest, and shriek aloud in vain,
A hidden voice says, "Zany, do not grieve,
George D. Lottman.

Pals Again!

At the White House last week, two Italian lads ran into each other and fell into a clinch-and-kiss act. They hadn't seen each other for years—the last time, in fact, they were both in Hollywood working with Rudolph Valentino in the picture, "Sainted Devil." One of them was then the assistant cameraman. The other was an actor and helped in direction. The first, Arthur De Titta, is now the personal photographer for the President of the United States. The other, Guido Orlando, is the founder of the Republicans-for-Roosevelt League and the League of Citizens of Foreign Birth. He is being mentioned for the post of Special Assistant Secretary of Labor.

With a Stein!

It may or may not be a good book, but I'm clapping calloused mitts in advance for Ben De Casseres' tome—the title thrills me—"O Keg, America!"

Book Stuff!

In connection with Renee Carroll's book, "In Your Hat," they tell me that the entire first edition had been run off when the publishers suddenly became panicky because someone told them the Alex Gard caricature of Mayor O'Brien was libelous and in bad taste. All prints were destroyed. That is vurry, vurry in-t'r'sting, perhaps — but what hands me a snicker is that they replaced the O'Brien features with a caricature of Earl Carroll!

Words!

Every so often in digging around in old books, you're suddenly slapped in the face by a word or phrase which you've always considered the pet coinage of one or another of your favorite modern scribblers. I'll never forget the kick I got when reading a piece about Lord Byron I learned that he had employed the phrase "tossing the bull" in the same sense that we use it today—I think it was in "Don Juan" but I'm not sure. Yesterday, coming across a copy of Leon Mead's book on "Slang" or "Word Coinage," printed in 1902, I pulled out this extract: "I have been reading John Kendrick Bangs' story, 'The Enchanted Typewriter.' In explaining his use of the word 'monkey' as a verb he goes on to say it savors somewhat of what a friend of his calls the English 'slanguage,' as distinguished from Andrew Lang-uage."

There Is a Hell!

(In reply to Arthur Swanstrom)

There IS a hell, I'll tell the world,
Of this I'm satisfied,
There IS a hell, right here on earth,
Where mortal men abide.
The hell which oft' intrudes upon
The calm of Summer night,
The hell of neighbors who do nothing
Else but scrap and fight,
The hell of ringing telephones,
Disturbing your deep slumber,
The hell of sad discovery,
That "it was a wrong number."
The hell of waiting for a dame,
Who's only two hours late,
The hell of ascertaining
She "forgot she had a date."
The hell of eating biscuits baked
By sweet and loving brides,
The hell of realizing what
They do to your insides.
The hell of cracking jokes you thought
Were "clean and nice and lawful,"
The hell of hearing someone chirp
"That's lousy, rank and awful!"
The hell of scenic country lanes,
At night, when Love is harking,
The hell of a gruff voice which says,
"Move on, you two—no parking!"
The hell of planning lavish sprees
With part of next week's pay,
The hell of shattered hope when your
Bank takes a holiday ! ! !
L'ENVOI.
If I've already lived through hell
On earth, then please explain,
Just to what place will my soul go
When I leave this terrain ! ! !

The Versatile Helds!

It can't possibly be news any more that the John Held, Jrs., filled a bassinet in New Orleans some days ago. But I don't recall reading that the day after the baby was born the famous illustrator suddenly moved into a room in the same hospital, where his wife proudly surveying her new child, a flock of medicos extracted a pouting appendix from Mister Held. Mother, child, father and appendix are all doing well as this is being written.

Yowsah!

Broadway novelty stores are displaying a realistic-looking cigar which actually contains a fountain pen, pencil and letter opener. An improvement, according to the dialect George Givot, over those realistic-looking cigars which are rumored to contain tobacco.

Around Hollywood's Studios

By Louella O. Parsons

Someone out-talked Rudy Valee. He is no longer peeved at Paramount. In fact, he has forgotten that he wants to play Charles Laughton roles and has compromised by agreeing to sing a song in "International House." Eddie Sutherland, who has completed the scenes with Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Sari Maritza and the rest of the company, leaves for New York to direct the Valee song and get some shots of New York. While there he will also incorporate selections in "International House" furnished by the Cab Calloway orchestra. Mrs. Sutherland, formerly Aubrey Henderson, will accompany her husband. It's their honeymoon.

Chatter in Hollywood:

Only a few intimate friends know that Ramon Novarro and Myrna Loy have a tremendous yen for each other. Ramon, heretofore impervious to women with the exception of Greta Garbo for whom he admitted a worshipful adoration, has fallen hard for the red-headed actress. Myrna returns Ramon's feeling and they have been seeing each other every day. No one has ever associated the thought of marriage with Ramon who has frequently talked of going into a monastery. But it may be marriage in this case for it is his greatest romance.

A Line or Two:

Eddie Robinson sent a telegram to friends in Hollywood saying: "It's a boy. Contrary to all expectations baby had no cigar in his mouth and no pistol in his hand." A cable from Countess Di Frasso. She and Mary Pickford are returning to the U. S. A. on March 23. The Italian Crown Prince of Italy entertained the Fairbanks in Sorrento and Mary showed "Secrets" which delighted the 125 guests. Constance Bennett is reported as having gained 10 pounds during her 30 days aboard the Dutch freighter. Greta Garbo, our correspondent also tells us, shopped in Paris. Here is a laugh. She bought two tweed suits. The friends of Veree Teasdale are just now hearing of her operation for appendicitis. She is recuperating. Mrs. Leslie Carter, who has made her home in Hollywood for some years, is leaving. She and her husband are going to the French Riviera to make their home in Monaco. She will be missed. William Kernell isn't going to take a chance on his music going wrong in "My Lips Betray." He is staying right on the set during the filming of the picture which stars Lillian Harvey.

Sorry for Norman

Everyone who knows Norman Foster likes him. That's why there was gloom in Hollywood today when it became known that he had been rather seriously injured in an automobile accident. The details were meagre beyond that he had been hurt and that he had left the cast of "Rules for Wives." Columbia had already started work on this opus which features their newest star, Fay Wray. A hurry call for someone to substitute for Norman was made. They were lucky enough to get Gene Raymond, who had just finished "Zoo in Budapest" for Jesse Lasky.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

The responsibilities — perhaps we should say obligations — imposed upon the acknowledged first lady of our theater are of no small consequence. While "An Amazing Career," at the Wilbur, has served the excellent purpose of restoring Ethel Barrymore to modern comedy, the play is not likely to be listed in the records as anything of enduring quality. As entertainment it is thin; what substance it does reveal is shown not only in Miss Barrymore's fine performance, but in individual contributions by the rank and file.

* * *

An amusing but highly improbable story forms the background of Miss Barrymore's first major venture as actress-manager. As a dramatic narrative "An Amazing Career" is singularly amazing. It covers 20 years in the life of an operatic songstress whose emotions are divided between her art and the care of children. She must have children to coddle. The solution is simple. By one husband she has a few of her own; then she picks a second spouse who has four on his own account by a previous marriage. And so it runs—one husband after another until the fourth, and he being a bachelor can bestow no dowry in the form of boistering youngsters. You are spared the romping sons and daughters which Rosita Morales (Miss Barrymore) has collected, but there is constant chatter about them. The facility with which Rosita disposes of one husband to embrace another provides its own amusement. She always demands and gains possession of the children.

Ethel BarryMore

* * *

A silly story, of course, but not altogether lacking in quiet humors. Miss Barrymore played the flighty and imaginative Rosita with delicate regard for the play's comedy values. She missed none of them, although it could have been no easy task to keep pace with the assorted temperaments which made up her good natured group of former husbands. Miss Barrymore excels in comedy; she made that clear upon more than one occasion during the performance. The pity of it is that Victor Wittgenstein and Sheridan Gibney, twin authors of "An Amazing Career," had not more clearly measured the depth of Miss Barrymore's ability to play with dramatic fire and not scorch her fingers. It was just easy going comedy—a bit too easy.

* * *

Miss Barrymore, naturally, made the most of what the authors provided. In fact she became their great and good friend, and under circumstances that were none the best. But she was not without faithful support. Alfred A. Hesse, McKay Morris, Sebastian Braggiotti and Frederic Worlock composed a quaint quartet of husbands. They bore up remarkably well under the rapidly changing scenes. Josephine Hull was agreeably cast as a plump contralto, and Misha Ferenzo was more than acceptable as an explosive accompanist. You could call it a perfectly balanced company and not be wrong.

* * *

"An Amazing Career" is comedy of few excitements and great incredulity. If its texture were as sound as its acting, you could give it a lusty cheer.

Museum Helped in Making Film

The Boston Museum of Natural History played an important part in the making of "King Kong," motion picture thriller which comes to RKO Keith's next Friday night for a limited engagement.

It was to the Boston Museum, that Merian C. Cooper was forced to turn when, in making "King Kong," he needed to know how an ape 50 feet high would behave under certain conditions.

"King Kong" tells of a party of American movie men who explore a forgotten island. An ape captures the young American girl in the party.

The Boston Teachers' Club has taken over the evening performance of "Eine Nacht In Paradies" tonight. The theater will not therefore be open to the public but will open as usual tomorrow at 1 o'clock.

Joint Concert in Jordan Hall

By MOSES SMITH

The concert of Maurine Palmer, contralto, and David Blair McClosky, baritone, in Jordan Hall last night satisfied the first standard of music-making—which is a program of good music intelligently arranged.

With perhaps an exception or two at which the fastidious might grumble, all of the songs were good to hear. Some of them were well out of the beaten track, and therefore doubly welcome—like the group of duets from Brahms' opus 28.

His singing was technically fluent, his phrases were finely moulded, and his interpretation exhibited not only care and intelligence but musicality and emotional conviction.

Miss Palmer's voice was far too small to carry effectively, nor was its quality uniform or always beautiful. She seemed, moreover, to be suffering from an indisposition, which almost nullified what must have been diligent and intelligent preparation of her part.

LUBITSCH REJECTS STORY

Director Turns Down Coward's "Design for Living"

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Universal Service Motion Picture Editor

Copyright, 1933, by Universal Service, Inc.

Los Angeles, March 22—Ernst Lubitsch has rejected "Design for Living," starring Frederic March, Miriam Hopkins and Herbert Marshall. He cannot see a picture in Noel Coward's play and since his contract calls for his own selection of a story unless Paramount can prepare a treatment that pleases him, he will definitely refuse to direct it. All writers were called in today to get a treatment ready by next Monday to submit to Mr. Lubitsch.

Louella O. Parsons

I am told that Ernst had his eye on "One Sunday Afternoon" and was a bit upset that this play had been handed to Stephen Roberts to direct. He came back with a counter suggestion, however, saying that he would like to produce "The Czarina," Pola Negri's former play, and guess with whom. Mae West, no less. Wouldn't she be swell as Catherine of Russia, the lady with all the affairs.

Snapshots of Hollywood:

Reports point to the Saturday Nighters debut party as a social success. PEGGY HOPKINS JOYCE with her shadow, JACK OAKIE. SALLY EILERS all made up with HOOT GIBSON. RALPH FORBES entertaining ELSIE JANIS and GILBERT WILSON. JOAN MARSH beaued by the devoted TOMMY LEE were among those who gathered in the Biltmore for this big event. MARIE DRESSLER has written ALLAN WALKER, popular host in La Quinta desert resort, that she is due back next week. He is getting her bungalow in readiness. HAROLD LLOYD visited RING LARDNER in his hideout last weekend. RING'S ideas would be grand for HAROLD'S comedy. EDNA MAY OLIVER is moving into her new home. TOM BROWN showing WILLIAM TILDEN, tennis champion, around Hollywood. TOM introduced BILL to MARLENE DIETRICH, making his day complete. MRS. CHARLES CRANE, house guest of MRS. TOWNSEND NETCHER (CONSTANCE TALMADGE), returning to Chicago after a round of parties seldom given any visitor. That's all today.

SCINTILLATING WALLS DONE IN SILVER

Silver leaf walls and a black floor give an interesting, modern look to "The Silver Room" in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lathrop Brown on Beacon st. The house was designed by Charles Bulfinch about 1805, and has been admired by many.

Edited by MARGARET MATSON

TO CHARLES BULFINCH goes the credit for designing the house at 45 Beacon st., now owned by Mr. and Mrs. Lathrop Brown. It is the third of three houses done for Mr. Harrison Gray Otis, and was built between 1805 and 1806. Mr. Charles Bulfinch was the most capable architect of the time. It was shortly before this that he completed the Massachusetts State House.

To Mrs. Lathrop Brown, herself, is credit due for the rare beauty of the interior. She has been her own decorator and has furnished the house from her own collection. The "Silver Room," which we have pictured, shows the extent of her genius. The walls are entirely of silver leaf, the floors a glossy black and the fireplace is of faultless white marble. All the furnishings in the room have been chosen from the eighteenth century a perfect harmony. One enters this room from one which is entirely different, but equally lovely, the Georgian pine room. The walls of the pine room are very simply paneled, with elaborate carving over the fireplace and over the doors—carving which one might travel far to see. Were space on this page less limited we [illegible] shown several pictures of this most remarkable home. Suffice it to say that we consider it one of the most charming we have ever seen.

Boy Too Young to Wed, Says Miss Fairfax

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am 18 years old, and have been going with a young man two years older for some time. Quite a number of friends and relatives have told me that 18 is too young to keep "steady company," so I am asking your advice. We are both very fond of each other, and we feel sure this is not a case of puppy love.

UNDECIDED

Dear Undecided: If you are thinking of marrying in the immediate future a boy of 20 strikes me as pretty young to assume the responsibilities of a husband in these troubled times. But if you are just what is known as his best girl I can possibly see any objection to your going about together, if your family approves of the acquaintance.

He Has His Doubts

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am eighteen years of age, and in love with a girl of sixteen, and we've been going around together for nearly a year. She'll always make a date when I ask her, and she says she likes me a lot. She also tells me that she doesn't go out with other boys, but her friends give me another story and say she's a great hand at writing letters. I can't help but believe this. There's another girl of eighteen who would be very glad to go with me if I gave her the opportunity. Do you think it would be well for me to quit this younger girl?

FAITHFUL JOHNNY

Dear Johnny: I think it would be well for you to make a few dates with the eighteen-year-old girl and also a few with a girl of seventeen, if you happen to know any of that delightful age. Eighteen is entirely too young for what is known as a "closed corporation." As your time of life, you should know plenty of young people of both sexes.

Would Like to Meet Her Formally

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I go to a prominent preparatory school and am nineteen years of age. I am quite lonely and would give almost anything to meet a certain girl. Whenever she passes me on the street she always says 'Hello' to me, and when I pass her home she waves to me in the friendliest way. This has been going on for a long time now; but I want to meet her formally and invite her to some of our dances. What should I do? PERPLEXED.

Dear Perplexed: The only way to meet anyone formally is to get someone who is acquainted with you both to introduce you properly. And I hope you will forgive me for saying that it strikes me a good deal like locking the stable door after the horse has gone, to insist on a formal introduction after you young people have been giving distinct evidence of knowing each other for some time past.

GOOD MANNERS

Introductions

WHEN YOU have been introduced say, 'How do you do.' This is the accepted form [illegible] acknowledging an introduction [illegible] It is really all you need to [illegible] duction.

I grant you that the [illegible] mean little [illegible] and they don't even [illegible] an answer, for the person at that moment, probably isn't concerned about how we "do." However, these are the words that must be used.

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

Wild Geese

IT WAS a fall night graying on toward dawn—with the marsh fog flapping and the marsh wind [illegible] [illegible] in the hollow darkness.

Elsie Robinson

For an hour I had stood there shuddering, waiting—a youngster of eight. Waiting for what? I did not know. As though a hand had tugged something had drawn me out of my warm bed down into the garden—then left me stranded in the terrible night.

Where had it gone, that safe and solid daytime world? For a small space around me there was the old [illegible] [illegible]—the rough, hard pressure [illegible] baked earth beneath my feet [illegible] loom of the lilac bushes; the wavering paleness that was picket fence.

But beyond that, everything [illegible] away. Stopped. And another Place began. An endless emptiness, filled with vague, moist movement—and a harsh, honking cry, sweeping high above me in the darkness.

Wild geese!

Why were they there racing through the night? Why were they not in the quiet shelter of the trees and barnyard, where other birds found rest?

Birds had homes like people. Homes they loved. Friendly plant. Special spots for seeds. Favorite ponds. Birds, like people, loved to be close and safe. Why then, did some birds leave their safe, snug [illegible] to rise so madly through the dangerous dark?

Listening to their wild screams, the drumming thunder of their great wings, I wondered. But I found no answer. [illegible] the same restless [illegible] down us [illegible] the wild geese [illegible] the shivering [illegible] out of our warm beds into the trackless night.

I wanted [illegible] [illegible] no one ever loved it more [illegible] [illegible] the smell of [illegible] strong [illegible] and picking spice, and freshly ironed sheets—I loved them all. And those dear faces which I knew by heart. Why must I leave them?

Yet I did!

No sooner had I found a little peace—struck root a bit—than [illegible] mad, and off I'd go!

For what? And why? Didn't I know I'd be sorry? they asked.

How could I answer? Of course I knew I would be sorry. More bitter lonely than they'd ever dream. And frightened [illegible]

And yet I [illegible]

On and on, and on.

Away from peace and comfort, pleasure, honor, love—

On and away.

TO SEE WHAT ELSE THERE WAS—

TO SEE HOW FAR LIFE TOOK YOU—IF YOU DARED TO GO!

I was like that. Some people were. Wild geese—they must go on. Leave everything, risk everything, for the chance to see for the [illegible]

Wild geese—going on and on. [illegible] even as they flew [illegible] their hearts [illegible] nights, [illegible]

Wild geese. Some people were [illegible] Had to [illegible]

And some people weren't like that. Couldn't be.

Well, it was a big world. There was no [illegible] Some to stay —some to [illegible] So life carried on.

Roast Beef and Yorkshire Pudding

By MARTHA LEE

From Martha Lee's Wednesday Morning Broadcast Over Station WAAB

FOR GENERATIONS in Merrie Olde England they've been masters of the art of cooking roast beef to perfection and serving it with scrumptious Yorkshire pudding, but most American housewives fall down on the second half of this combination.

Here's the way George Rector tells us it was prepared and served in his father's famous restaurants.

With Yorkshire Pudding

Select a cut of beef for roasting—rib, sirloin or round. Choice [illegible] size of family or individual taste. Place meat in a hot oven (preheated for 15 minutes), for 30 minutes at 475 degrees, with no water. Reduce heat to moderate (350 deg.) and continue roasting, allowing 20 minutes to the pound. Baste meat every 10 minutes with fat in pan and just before it is ready [illegible] the oven [illegible] top and [illegible] with salt and pepper. Make Yorkshire Pudding as follows:

Mix 1 cup of flour and ¼ [illegible] [illegible] gradually add 1 cup of [illegible] until perfect [illegible] 2 well beaten [illegible] into [illegible] greased with [illegible] of the [illegible] beef drippings [illegible] oven [illegible] minutes [illegible] in small [illegible] when serving.

P. S.—Spring classes in the Martha Lee Cooking School will open April 4 and 5, and it is not a bit early to send in YOUR enrollment for either the Tuesday evening classes, held at 6.30, or the Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Grooming

Liquid Diet

Because the three-day liquid diet doesn't make facial tissues saggy, flesh lose firmness, it is one of the most desirable and satisfactory means of weight deleting. Be a food wet once every four or five weeks. For three days, take no solid food, except perhaps a nibble of cracker now and then. There's plenty of nourishment in clear soups, clam broth, milk, buttermilk, tomato juice, lemonade (unsweetened) and grape juice. In one year it's no trick at all to separate oneself from 15 to 20 pounds. Better to see your doctor first, though, just to be sure it's all right for you.

Safe Treatment of Varicose Veins

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

IN THE past quarter of a century great advances have been made in medicine. New germs, new diseases, as well as new methods of treating old diseases, have been brought to the knowledge of the world.

Dr. Copeland

The treatment of varicose veins has changed a lot since the time I was a medical student. In those days a sufferer from this affliction was made to wear rubber stockings, or some other mechanical appliance. But these gave little if any, relief. In severe cases, operation was advised.

The victim who subjected himself to an operation in those days was indeed a brave man. The affected veins were [illegible] the leg. Convalescence from the operation was of long duration and the scars left by the operation were unsightly and painful.

I have [illegible] ed by injecting a certain substance into the vein. This injected medicine causes "sclerosis" or hardening and collapse of the involved vein. It is a simple and safe method of treatment [illegible] office. It requires [illegible] minutes, and [illegible]

[illegible] stout persons, particularly those who stand on their feet a great deal. It is frequently found in pregnancy. This is caused by the increased weight and pressure placed on the veins of the legs. [illegible] are common sufferers from this affliction.

Avoid tight garters and any constriction of the body. If you are a sufferer from varicose veins, I advise that you consult with your doctor [illegible] ment I have [illegible] neglect varicose veins, for the larger they become the more difficult [illegible] will need to cure the defect.

Bear in mind that varicose veins are enlarged and distended [illegible]

There are only two methods of treatment. One is by operation and the other by injection. Of the two, the injection method is simpler and probably safer.

Judge Fuchs Reveals Ideas About Braves Likes a Winner ↕ McKechnie's System Champions on Parade R. P. Tibolt's Courage

By JACK CONWAY

Mr. Boston

"What do you think of the 1933 Braves?" I asked the Judge.

"They have been losing most of their exhibition games," replied Fuchs, "but as Bill McKechnie tells me exhibition games do not count in the percentage column of the league standing. Bill believes that the chief purpose for a Spring training season is to get the players into condition, and to try out new plays.

"John McGraw and Joe McCarthy always like to win ball games whether they are exhibition contests or league games. Personally I think I like the McGraw and McCarthy systems, but yet I may be wrong.

"I have remained away from the Braves camp intentionally so that McKechnie could work out his own theories about getting a ball club ready for a league race. If I were in Florida today, I would be urging the club to win even if somebody might risk breaking a leg doing so.

"I have the fullest confidence in McKechnie's ability, and I shall not interfere in anything he may do. But you won't get angry with me, will you, if I keep my own ideas about desiring a winning team even in exhibition games?

"I feel we have plenty of good material and that we shall make a better showing than we did last year."

Fuchs Tells of His Own Plans in Baseball

I asked the Judge what his own immediate plans were.

"I shall remain in Boston," he replied. "I came here from New York, and the town has grown on me.

"I would like to assist in giving Boston a winning ball club in the National League. Of course if I definitely concluded I could not bring about this result, I would then agree to sell my interest in the Braves. I am not yet willing to admit I cannot make good here. So I shall keep right on trying, and I feel I shall get full co-operation from my club and support from the public.

"Charley Adams has been very helpful to me in all the ups and downs I have had with the Braves. Adams came into baseball from the business world. Baseball is not like an ordinary business. There is a certain hurrah and good fellowship in baseball that you do not even get in some of the other branches of athletics. Adams has fallen into the spirit of baseball. I believe he likes it, and he should do much to help the game.

"There is something more in baseball than mere money. I read a sporting publication the other day which carried a story about the sale of the Red Sox by Bob Quinn to Tom Yakkey. The story went on to say how the sale was a good thing for baseball. A good thing for baseball to have Bob Quinn out as owner of the Red Sox. A highly ridiculous statement. Baseball needs men like Quinn. He loved baseball, and it was a cruel blow to me when I heard he was going to sell his club.

Boston Is Capital of Sporting Universe

Somebody served the ice cream, and then a long list of champions and near champions were introduced.

I challenge any other city to produce such an array of notables from the world of sport as attended the "Athletic Luncheon." Gaze at this list.

R. P. Tibolt was chairman. He was assisted by Carroll Swan. I was glad to hear Bill Cunningham agree with my recent statement that Tibolt is also a champion. He is head of the New England Coke Co. and crashed each Boston newspaper with a double paged advertisement in regard to the product of his company during the bank holidays. Real courage by a business man. Let's have more of the same kind of leadership and business will not require so much red ink.

Archie Campbell of Toronto, who has gone wrestler, will be seen in action against Cowboy Hughes of Oklahoma . . . Bob Quinn, former Red Sox owner, has gone to Columbus, Ohio, on business in connection with the recent sale of the Red Sox to Tom Yakkey . . . It was a Columbus syndicate that put up $1,200,000 for Quinn when he bought the Sox from the late Harry Frazee . . . If Quinn had been able to dispose of the Sox a year ago, he would have got the job of president of the American League . . . The Bruins headed the American Division of the National Hockey League in 1928, 1929, 1930 and 1931 . . . And now in 1933 . . . That is a record for some other club to try to beat . . . There was not any depression to that capacity crowd at the hockey match at the Garden . . . Eddie Shore is still our idea of the greatest as well as the most courageous hockey player in the world.

Dash Defeat Avenged by Ralph Metcalfe

Stagg Acclaimed

Stockton, Cal., March 22 (AP)—As enthusiastic as a young man taking over his first job, Amos Stagg had arrived here today to assume his position as football coach at the College of the Pacific.

Crowds lined the streets as Stagg, at the head of a parade of students and city officials, rode to the college auditorium.

Metcalf set up a new Canadian record of 6.2 seconds in winning the 60 yard title of the Canadian championships here last night, nosing out Bert Pearson, Hamilton schoolboy, and Emmett Toppino of New Orleans. It was Toppino who handed Metcalfe his only defeat of the indoor season.

Glen Cunningham, University of Kansas miler, George Spitz of New York University, and Milton Sandler of the German-American A. C., New York, also turned in impressive victories.

Cunningham, abandoning his specialty for the time being, easily won the two-mile title, beating Lloyd Longman of Toronto by a wide margin in the comparatively slow time of 9:39.6.

Phil Edwards, Canadian Olympic runner, staged a comeback and defeated Ned Turner of the University of Michigan in the 1000 yards event in 2:17.4.

ROSS TO DRIVE SIX FOR TILT WITH LEAFS SATURDAY

By BILL GRIMES

Though his Bruins brought him home another N. H. L. American Division championship and the Prince of Wales Cup by defeating the Rangers 3 to 2 at the Boston Garden, Manager Art Ross announced this morning that his charges now would get down to the business of playing some serious hockey.

Ross has been through the mill too many times to run the run of his club letting down between now and the first playoff game with the Toronto Maple Leafs at the Boston Garden on Saturday night.

With the exception of those players who participate in the charity game tonight against the All Stars, the Bruins worked out today at the Garden. The entire squad will report for an hour session tomorrow and Manager Ross will polish off his attack on Friday.

During the past month the Bruins have traveled at a championship clip. At the start of the season the fans were somewhat skeptical over the chances of the Rossmen reaching the playoffs, because they did not measure up to the other contenders as regards speed.

BRUINS POWERFUL

Ross appreciated the fact that his Bruins lacked speed, but he also knew that he had the most powerful team in the league.

The Bruins were anything but startling during the early stages of the race. But they were coming all the time. Ross discovered that he was in need of a left winger, so he made a trade with the Chicago Black Hawks, who agreed to swap Vic Ripley for Billy Burch.

In the past the Bruins have encountered some David Harums while making trades, but such was far from being the case this season. Vic Ripley and Alex Smith were the makings of the Bruins. Burch is washed up as a player, while Roche is unlikely to be other than a minor leaguer.

STEWART VALUABLE

Big Nels Stewart has been an important asset to the Bruins. Stewart is such a crafty workman that he was not appreciated until late in the season. On two occasions this season Stewart was responsible for the Bruins emerging from slumps which threatened to ruin them. During the last four weeks Stewart's work has been a revelation to the students of the game.

From now until the windup of the season, Nels Stewart will be the most feared player in the Bruins lineup. He has no peer as a money player.

When the Bruins tackle the Maple Leafs on Saturday night, Perk Galbraith will work with Marty Barry and Dit Clapper on the first line. This shift is a defensive one, for Galbraith's duties will be restricted to the covering of Chuck Conacher. The second line of Vic Ripley, Nels Stewart and Joe Lamb will be intact. Red Beattie will center for Harry Oliver and Obs Heximer.

SMITH, HEXIMER TALLY

After the first period there was a letdown in the Bruins-Rangers game last night at the Garden. During the wild first 20 minutes, there was an abundance of action and Alex Smith and Obs Heximer put the Rossmen out in front with a couple of snappy goals.

Babe Seibert was the man of the hour for Rangers in the second period, for he put his team back in the ball game by converting a Murray Murdock pass.

Alex Smith caged the important tally late in the second chapter for with the Bruins leading 3 to 1 in the final canto, Art Somers popped home the second Rangers tally.

Then the Bruins took to the defense. For 10 minutes they did practically no rushing. Time and again the Rangers threatened to break through but Thompson and Shore were too much for them.

No Hitch-Hikers On Dirigible Akron. R. W. Hardy May Miss Kentucky Derby.

By BILL CORUM

Miami Beach, Fla., March 21 (US)—The Akron, mighty dirigible of the United States' aerial defenses, sailed over the Tropical Park race track the other afternoon, and Swifty Morgan stood in the infield waving his cane and yelling: "Hey, are you going toward New York?"

Swifty has been looking for a hitch hike back to the big town for ten days now and this looked like his last chance. I regret to report that the commander of the big ship did not throw out the life line. Maybe he doesn't know Swifty. Then again, he may have been warned against hitch hikers.

The big dirigible has been testing its fighting equipment while here in Florida, and one does not get a true conception of its size until he sees tiny scout planes shooting away from it like aroused hornets leaving a hornets' nest that has been poked with a stick.

DIRIGIBLE IMPRESSIVE

There is no escaping, then, that it is a tremendous and majestic craft. How dangerous it would be in a battle in the air is another matter.

The writer knows as little about such things as any man, woman or child you can name off-hand, but has doubted the importance of lighter-than-air aircraft since the September afternoon in 1918 when he watched a second lieutenant named Frank Luke, from Arizona, knock over two German "sausages" out of three quite single-handed.

Commodore Gar Wood, more concerned than most of our citizens with our national defenses and certainly a man who spent freely from his own pocket to contribute to them, visited the Akron at its mooring Sunday afternoon and expressed a desire to see it in action.

So early next morning the commodore of the great silver cigar of the sky flew low over the commodore's home on Indian river and gave him a private exhibition.

Needless to say, Mr. Wood was delighted. But, then, anything that has a motor in it and a lot of funny mechanical dood-dads with which you can do tricks, delights the commodore.

HARDY MAY MISS DERBY

Connie Savage gives us an interesting Kentucky Derby paragraph. It seems that word has come from the Blue Grass section of Kentucky that R. W. Hardy is quite ill and may not be able to attend the Derby this year.

That is interesting, because Mr. Hardy is the only person who has seen every Kentucky Derby from that May day in 1875, when Aristides won it, through last spring, when Burgoo King galloped home in front.

That makes 58 Kentucky Derbys, by our count, that Mr. Hardy has seen, and it will be a pity if he does not live to round out the three score. Connie says he is putting up a battle for it, and insists he will be on deck as usual when the bugle blows May 6.

Miller Tops Dado; Guarantee Refused

Los Angeles, March 22 (AP)—Freddie Miller made his third successful defense of his N. B. A. world's featherweight title with a one-sided victory over Speedy Dado here. Miller came in at 125¼ and Dado weighed 4¾ pounds less.

Dado guaranteed Miller $4000 for the opportunity but because of the small crowd, Manager Pat O'Riley took instead 37½ per cent of the gate, which did not exceed $8000.

Crimson Swimmers in National Meet

The Harvard swimming team, which placed three men in the finals of the Intercollegiate championships last Saturday, will attempt to improve that mark at the National Intercollegiates at New Haven this week-end.

Coach Hal Ulen has entered 10 men in the meet, together with the 200 yard relay team. The four-man team is Harvard's biggest hope for a title, having won six successive races this year.

Capt. Bob Fallon, Edward Parker, George Wightman and Benton Wood comprise the relay.

Cochran Gains on Hoppe in Cue Play

Chicago, March 22 (AP)—Only five points separated Welker Cochran of San Francisco, world's three cushion billiard champion, and challenger Willie Hoppe today as they etnered the fifth and sixth blocks of their 600 point match.

Hoppe was in front by a grand total margin of 200 to 195 after 185 innings of play although the champion, winner of three straight blocks, was rapidly catching up.

Ex-Trackman Uses Medals for Teeth

Detroit, March 22 (AP)—John Lewis, one-time member of Detroit City College's track squad and of the 1928 American Olympic team in the 400-meter event, if he is not eating his medals, is eating on them.

His funds exhausted, he found himself in need of dental work. So he went to his chest of medals, picked out some gold ones, and took them to a dentist. The dentist used the necessary gold for Lewis' tooth repairs, and accepted the remainder in payment.

DEFEATS FAIL TO BOTHER M'KECHNIE

By JOE CASHMAN

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 22—If the Braves' followers back home are discouraged over the somewhat inauspicious start of their favorites in citrus circuit competition, they're all alone in their misery.

Neither Manager Bill McKechnie nor any of his Tribesmen are concerned over the situation.

Wilkinsburg Will prophesied in mid-winter that his club would finish no worse than third in the coming National League flag struggle. He still feels the same way about it, in spite of the ease with which the Yanks, Phils and Cards have tossed the Warriors around at times.

N. L. SEASON PILOT'S CONCERN

Bill admits he would like to win his share of these exhibition games. At the same time, he intimates that he is leaving several stones unturned in his efforts to chalk up Florida victories in order to be able to present his strongest front on April 12, when the games that count begin.

"I'm not surprised that we haven't won more games," Bill declared today. "I've never had more than 50 per cent of my full strength on the field for nine innings, and it usually takes more power than that to overcome big league opposition, even in the South.

"Weak hitting is all that cost us a slice of the series coin last year. Our pitching and fielding was of the best.

"We have even more defensive strength now. Frank Hogan's catching greatly increases the effectiveness of all of our pitchers.

"With slightly more hitting than in '32, we can't possibly be kept out of the money.

"Worthington has fully recovered from the broken ankle which robbed us of his services for the last half of last season. If he had been in there when Jordan came up from Baltimore to lead the team with the stick, we would have finished a notch or two higher, even without Hogan.

McKECHNIE CONFIDENT

Your correspondent hasn't seen enough of the Tribesmen yet to pass comment on McKechnie's views, but he must admit that never before since coming to Boston has Bill expressed so much confidence in training camp.

The Braves today take time out. Bill McKechnie would like to hold two workouts before resuming the series with the Yankees tomorrow, but he'll have to be content with one as the New Yorkers play at Waterfront Park this afternoon.

The Tribesmen in eight games have to their credit a victory in the opener and one tie. Until the ninth inning yesterday it seemed the losing streak was broken. Then the Yanks staged a five-run rally to win 8 to 6.

Buddy Lake, star kid pitcher, was charged with the loss, but he should have breezed home a winner. Taking over a two-run lead from "Huck" Betts, he pitched two hitless frames and fanned Dickey and Chapman and but for a fly that should have been caught and an error, he would have allowed only one tally in the ninth.

The crowds at Waterfront Park are the smallest in years. The answer is simple. Babe Ruth's absence.

The Braves holdouts are still holding out. Urbanski admits it while Brandt, Zachary and Shires reply the club must give out such information, which is another way of saying they have not signed.

SANTA, HUNT GO AT ARENA

Eddie Mack stated today he would make an effort to sign the winner of the 10-round bout between Jose Santa, Portuguese giant, and Babe Hunt of Oklahoma, which will be held at the Arena tomorrow night, with Primo Carnera. It is expected that Primo will engage in one match in this country before his championship contest with Jack Sharkey.

Santa and Hunt are both ring dreadnaughts, and Mack feels that either of them would be able to give Carnera a severe test.

Jim Maloney, South Boston heavyweight, will make his appearance in the ring in a new role. He will act as chief second for his brother, Dick, who will clash with Joe Jankowski, former Salem high football player.

The eight-round semifinal brings together Al Silva of Cambridge, one of the stars of the "New Talent" shows, and Joe Delmont of Roxbury. Nap Proulx of Taunton will clash with Charley Longo of

Wings Burlesque to 14-10 Ice Win

Detroit, March 22 (AP)—The Detroit Red Wings, contenders for the National Hockey League championship, burlesqued to a 14 to 10 victory over an amateur team that boasted 26 members. It was a charity game that netted literally tons of foodstuffs for the needy.

Hartford, Ct., March 22 (AP)—The Capitol alleys men's bowling team, of Hartford, toppled the duckpins for a total of 1781 in the opening of the national bowling congress tournament, at once establishing themselves as formidable contender for the championship, and taking the first team prize.

Don Starts Training for Lutze Mat Clash

By JACK CONWAY

Ed Don George today stated he would immediately start training for his world's heavyweight championship wrestling bout with Nick Lutze which will be held at the Boston Garden a week from Friday night for the unemployed.

George signed for the bout at Paul Bowser's office following a hurried trip to this city from Buffalo upon the invitation of Mayor Curley.

"The public was not satisfied with the ending of your last title bout with Lutze," the mayor told George. "I believe you owe it to yourself and to the fans to meet Lutze again.

FRAY FOR UNEMPLOYED

"Paul Bowser has agreed to stage the contest for the unemployed of Boston. You have made a great deal of money in this city, Ed. I believe it is up to you to show your appreciation for what Boston has done for you. What do you say?"

George did not do any dodging.

"Give me a contract and I shall sign to wrestle Lutze," replied the champion. "I realize better than anybody else there was a cloud over my recent victory over Lutze. I am anxious to prove I can defeat Lutze or any other wrestler."

REFEREE PROBLEM VITAL

Lutze had previously signed a contract to wrestle George.

Details in connection with the championship match will be worked out later. The question of who will referee the champion bout will be an important issue. In the last contest, Referee Sam Smith was knocked through the ropes by Lutze and George. Nick then pinned the champion for what should have been the winning fall.

Smith was not in position to see the toss, and so could not declare Lutze the winner. After Referee Smith got back into the ring, George counted with a fall. Ed was declared the winner. The crowd was in an uproar for 15 minutes following the contest.

B. U. COACH IN HOSPITAL

The mystery concerning the disappearance of Alexander Welch, B. U. track coach after he was the victim of an attempted holdup at Brockton early Sunday morning, was cleared up today. Welch was chased by bandits, his car was smashed up and he was taken to the home of Dr. David B. Stearns, B. U. medico physician.

Dr. Stearns ordered a complete rest and took Welch to the Wyman House of the Cambridge City Hospital.

Dr. Stearns stated that although Coach Welch was badly shaken up in the accident the strain he was under in putting over the successful B. U.-McGill meet also had its effect.

Welch is expected to leave the hospital tomorrow but he will not resume his regular duties for another week.

SOX SHAKEUP THREATENED

Sarasota, Fla., March 22—"You boys will have to start hitting that ball if you want to hold your jobs," said Manager Marty McManus of the Red Sox, after his team took a trouncing from the Reds.

"Plenty of punch, that's what I want," he concluded.

In losing to the Reds, the Boston club dropped its second exhibition game of the training season, 10 to 1. The slugging Reds outhit the Sox 13 to 7. There followed Marty's threat to shake up the club.

Henry Johnson, Red Sox hurler, who gave the Reds plenty to think about for four innings, is going to be a great help to the Red Sox this season. Johnson has improved greatly.

Big Bob Kline, Justin McLaughlin, Ivy Paul Andrews, Gordon Rhodes, Johnny Welch and Walter Brown are other hurlers whom the Sox can depend upon this year.

McLaughlin Ready

Manager McManus thinks that McLaughlin is about right for the major league now and will hold him with the club and work him as a finishing pitcher. After a few games, if Justin needs more experience, he will go back to Scranton.

Robert "Fat" Fothergill is the only outfielder on the team, who is belting the ball in exhibition games. Bob also turns in a sparkling performance in the garden.

The Red Sox will journey over to Bradenton, Fla., tomorrow afternoon for a game with the St. Louis Cardinals. It is expected that Manager McManus will shake up his team for the game.

Up Ladder With Boss of Hose

By GEORGE UNDERWOOD

Chapter XV

The good is oft interred with their bones.
So let it be with Caesar."

And so let it be with Heine Zimmerman. Through a peculiar kink in human nature most of us who saw the World Series of 1917 remember it more for the prize honor pulled by poor Heinie than we do for the brilliant all-around exhibition of Eddie Collins, who once more flashed as a World Series hero.

In the memorable White Sox vs. Giants series of 1917 Collins, a "dud" in the 1914 series, came back in all his pristine glory, picking the old apple for a batting average of .409, running wild on the bases and performing brilliantly in the field.

Yet what persists in flashing on memory's screen as we look back on that prohibition year series is not any particular nifty bit of hitting or fielding by Collins, but the picture of heavy hoofed Heine Zimmerman in mad but futile pursuit of the fleet footed Collins on the trail from third to home.

THE SPRINT DERBY

The great sprinting Derby between Zimmerman and Collins took place in the sixth and deciding game of the series. Collins launched the rally that gave the White Sox three runs and the world's championship. It happened in the fourth inning.

Eddie lashed a hot bounder at Zimmerman who threw wild, Collins going to second. Shoeless Joe Jackson hit to right and when Robertson played the ball badly Collins went to third. Happy Felch bounced to Benton and Collins was trapped off third. Then things happened.

Zimmerman got the crazy idea in his head he could run Collins down and proceeded to chase him.

Other Giants became looney, too. Catcher Rariden, in the midst of the chase, ran past Collins and left the plate uncovered. When Rariden left the plate unguarded Holke failed to come over from first to protect it and Benton stood in the box dumbly watching the game of tag.

A rhinoceros cannot hope to beat a gazelle in a foot race. Heine never got within hailing distance of Eddie. He chased Collins right across the unguarded plate.

AWAY GOES GAME

While the chase was on Jackson and Felch both moved up. Gandil's hit brought the pair home with what proved to be the winning runs.

They made Heine Zimmerman the goat. Rariden, Benton and Holke all were just as much at fault as was Zimmerman, but poor Heine had to get all the brickbats and went down in baseball history as the man who "lost" the 1917 world's series.

And, oh what baseball Eddie Collins played that year! He led the Sox offensive and was a stone wall on the defense. All the Giant pitchers looked alike to him. Time and again he had the stands in a frenzy with his stops and throws.

But ask the average old-timer about the 1917 series. It is dollars to doughnuts he'll say:

Ol' Bill Shakespeare certainly said a mouthful, didn't he?

Passing the Puck

By BILL GRIMES

From now on, any time that C. F. Adams requests the gallery gods to refrain from throwing papers and refuge on the ice, the barrage will cease immediately. The boss of the Bruins announced last night that he had made arrangements whereby the attic spectators would be able to purchase their tickets for the Toronto games after the Bruins cleaned up the Rangers.

Adams was thoughtful enough to presume that some of the boys might have been short of the necessary cash last evening, so he arranged for identification cards entitling the holders to buy their tickets at any time before the first game.

Bruins, Leafs Rivals

The first Bruin-Toronto game on Saturday night at the Garden will mark the first meeting of these teams in a play-off series. The coming series is more attractive than the old-time Bruin-Canadien play-offs, for, although the Frenchmen possibly had more color, the real rivalry was lacking when compared with the feeling existing between the Rossmen and the Leafs.

The Ottawa 3-to-0 victory over Maroons eliminated the Montrealers from any chance of winning the Canadian division title, which went to Toronto, despite the fact that the Leafs lost to Americans.

Eddie Burke, former Cub, now with Americans, scored his first N. H. L. goal of the season last night against the Maple Leafs.

You would never have realized that Eddie Shore was playing with a cracked rib from the way he tore down the ice or from the manner in which he stepped into opponents or crashed into the boards.

Scoring Aces Unlucky

Since he came up to the N. H. L. Eddie Shore has served 783 minutes in penalty boxes, exclusive of play-offs. In the race for the all-time bad man record, Eddie has more than an hour's lead over the fiery Red Dutton.

Just before the start of the second period, Eddie Shore presented the Shore shield to Capt. George Ford of Belmont high school, Greater Boston League hockey co-champions. Capt. Ford and his mates were the guests of the Bruins.

"SHARLIE" -:- The Thrilling Story of a Flapper's Daughter -:- By BEATRICE BURTON

Sharlie Dances With "Percy" at Joyland and Drinks Considerable Beer

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Pretty, vivacious Sharlie Dunn is forced by her mother to marry Eddie Wallis, a young ne'er-do-well, after Sharlie had spent the night in his car, which had run out of gas. Although Sharlie enjoys Eddie's company, she is not in love with him. After the ceremony, Eddie takes Sharlie to live in his untidy apartment. That night Eddie is killed by an automobile. Sharlie returns to her mother's home. Mrs. Dunn, nicknamed "Dodie," and her friend, Maud Hanaberry, plan a party while their husbands are away. Sharlie is sent to her grandmother's. Finding her grandmother out, Sharlie goes to a dance hall.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Its railing was festooned with paper morning glories and make-believe ivy. Against the railing were little tables covered with pink-and-white cloths.

Sandwiches and soft drinks were served there, and a waitress was sitting in one corner when Sharlie stepped out upon the balcony that Saturday night. Except for her the place was deserted.

She ordered a bottle of ginger ale and sat, sipping it, to kill time until the orchestra came in and the music started up.

"The dancin' doesn't begin 'til half-past eight," the waitress told her, "and the crowd doesn't get here 'til nine."

At ten minutes to nine Sharlie went downstairs to the dressing room. She rolled her stockings down around her slender little ankles. Then, on second thought, she took them off entirely and put them into her handbag.

The orchestra was bursting into "That's What I Call Sweet Music" when she came out into the open space between the dressing room and the railing that fenced off the dance floor.

Part of System

Two or three men were leaning against the railing, watching the dancers. She walked over and stood near them where they could not fail to see her.

She kept her eyes straight ahead of her on the dance floor with its revolving couples.

That was part of the "picking-up" system evidently. She had often watched girls standing there alone, pretending that they did not see any of the young men near them.

"Would you like to dance?" she heard him ask and she turned around, pretending to be startled.

The look of innocent surprise that she had seen in so many other girls' faces flashed into her own.

On the Floor

"Why—I guess so," she said.

And before she had a chance to get a really good look at him she was on the floor, dancing with him.

Before the dance was over she decided that he was very good-looking. His eyes were steel blue and his hair was black. He was not much taller than she was, but he was stocky and well made. She could see him every now and then when they danced past the mirrors that lined the wall under the balcony.

"What's your name?" he asked her.

"What's yours?" Sharlie came back at him.

"Percy."

"Mine is Mary Garden!" said Sharlie, and they both laughed.

After the dance they went up on to the balcony and sat at one of the tables behind the morning glories and the dusty ivy.

"Aren't you going to tell me your name?" the man asked when he had ordered two glasses of near beer.

"Not a chance," said Sharlie, laughing for pure excitement and pleasure. "I've never let a man pick me up before and now that I've done it, I surely am not going to let you know who I am."

Sharlie shook her head.

"Let's just be Percy and Geraldine," she said, emptying her glass. "I can only stay here until ten o'clock, anyway. We'll probably never see each other again, after that."

They went downstairs and had three more dances.

It was 10 minutes to 10 when they came back to the balcony for a second glass of beer. "We'll have one more dance when we go downstairs, and then I'll take you wherever you're going," the man said, watching the foam sink in his glass.

Sharlie shook her head.

"No; I don't want you to."

"But I'm going to."

She saw that he had made up his mind to leave the dance hall when she did.

"Do you always insist upon wishing yourself on girls like this?" she asked him.

He shook his head, smiling at her. He was very good-looking with the bronze glow of the Joyland lights making his eyes seem very blue and his skin very brown.

"No. Not always. But then I don't meet you here always!" He laughed.

"I must get rid of him," thought Sharlie, with her mind on her grandmother.

When they went downstairs for the last dance she broke away from him. "I must powder my nose before we dance," she said. "It's shining like the moon."

For Critical Eyes

She went into the dressing room and wiped the paint from her mouth. Then she put on her stockings and straightened her hat, making herself ready for her grandmother's sharp critical eyes.

She was halfway down the stairs that led from Joyland to the street when she heard footsteps behind her.

She turned. "Percy, you are NOT going to come with me!"

"No, don't do that! I don't want you to touch me! I'm going home alone! said Sharlie, and she stamped her foot on the stair.

"Don't be silly little sister! You can't' go home alone at this time of night!" He was good-natured about it, but Sharlie could see that he meant business.

"All right," she said, "you can take me home if it will make you feel any better."

After all, she was eighteen and no fool. She knew how to take care of herself—and what possible harm could come to her in a street car with this attractive man, or under the lamp posts of Milton st.?

The thought that he might have an automobile of his own never occurred to her.

The people who danced at Joyland did not look like automobile owners, somehow. They were all young, and they all wore the snappy but shoddy clothes of the low salaried.

So when she and the strange young man reached the sidewalk and turned north she stopped in the street, her eyes full of a question.

"Why are we going this way?" she asked. For the nearest street car line was on Cherrill st., one block south.

"My car's up this way—in a parking place," the man explained and took her by the arm. "Come along."

But Sharlie hung back.

To ride home in a brightly-lighted street car with this man was one thing. To get into his automobile with him was quite another!

The newspapers were filled, from time to time, with tragic stories of girls who had foolishly trusted themselves to strangers in stories flashed through Sharlie's mind as she stood on the pavement in front of Joyland.

Does Sharlie succeed in getting rid of "Percy"? The next installment will tell the story of what happened in Miss Burton's most interesting way.

"My Boy Franklin"

As Told by His Mother

Franklin worked on his collection most ofen after supper, and while he lay sprawled on his tummy, sorting and pasting, I usually read aloud to him as he puttered. On one particular evening when he seemed less interested in the sound of my voice than usual, I put down the book of stories, and said:

"Franklin, I don't think there is any point in my reading to you any more. You don't hear me, anyway."

Franklin looked up, a whimsical smile on his face, and a mischievous glint in his eyes, and, much to my surprise, quoted verbatim the whole last paragraph of the essay I had been reading.

When I expressed what I felt was a very natural surprise at his ability to do so, he replied:

"Why, Mom, I would be ashamed of myself if I couldn't do at least two things at once."

I think myself that his uncanny sense of direction may have resulted as much from the amount we traveled as it did from his absorption in stamps. He used to keep his little face plastered against the window of the railway carriage, as we sped along, tearing himself away from the view only long enough to wriggle with embarrassment and disapproval whenever he heard me talking to the nice strangers who from time to time shared compartments with us. When, eventually, he might warm up and join in a conversation without quite knowing that he had, he always made an excellent impression. It was hard for people to believe that he had never been to school, and they marveled at his grasp of subjects that did not ordinarily interest children as young as he.

Though Franklin's educational progress had easily kept pace with that of boys who had been sent to school at a much earlier age, in the end we realized, as we knew we would in the beginning, that the time had come when we could no longer allow our desire to keep him with us to limit his scope of experiences.

That it was only fair to the boy to send him out into a world whose boundaries were not limited by the barriers the very intensity of our devotion imposed; where he might meet, not one or two, but many boys of his own age, with whom he might exchange ideas and form friendships that would endure through time.

So on that day of days that had been so long in contemplation, our neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, took Edmund, and with Franklin we set out, the six of us, for Groton School, where he was to spend the next four years of his life. And when school opened the next morning, we turned over to the head master there a white-faced little boy whose pride kept him from admitting that he carried a heavy heart and whose parents found the parting no easier to bear.

Franklin's early school days follow in the next installment of this charming story told by Mrs. Roosevelt.

Home Rule for Boston

Mayor Curley Shows Urgent Need

As you read the reply of Mayor Curley to the Chamber of Commerce Committee which demands a $15,000,000 reduction in city expenses, you must be impressed by the extent to which Boston has been deprived of home-rule.

Mayor Curley agrees that economy is necessary. Real estate is bearing a deadly burden of high taxes. The credit of the city must be maintained with the banks, to whom the city turns for loans in anticipation of taxes to be paid by the citizens and property owners.

But the hands of the Mayor of Boston have been tied by the Legislature.

He is without authority over the payrolls of the police and school departments, for example.

Here is the Metropolis of the Northeast, one of the most historic cities in America, which must furnish all the funds for municipal expenditures and yet its Chief Executive is deprived of the inherent right to decide how those funds will be reimbursed.

We cry for brave, resolute leadership in emergencies like this and we awake to find that the banner of leadership has been stripped from the leader we chose by popular choice of our people in city election.

City finances are impaired by a million-dollar deficit of the Boston Elevated which must be met from the City Treasury. State income and State corporation taxes no longer make their heavy contribution to the city. We are supposed to raise money for city purposes by the valuation and taxation of properties within the city, and we find a Board at the State House which may lower these valuations at its own sweet will and pleasure.

It is a strange situation which finds a city expected to put its financial house in order when that city is deprived of much of its power to assess and collect taxes, when we find it shorn of much of its power to disburse its own funds and when we find it compelled to accept burdens, such as the Elevated deficit, which are imposed upon it.

The Legislature of Massachusetts has made a mockery of home-rule. It is a Republican Legislature which for fifty years and more has deliberately sought to ham-string Boston because it happens to be a Democratic city. That is the plain truth of the matter. Home-rule has been wantonly destroyed in the interest of party politics.

Mayor Curley has stated a program of economy with intelligence and with a knowledge of municipal affairs which makes him unchallengeable in that field of government.

In so doing, the Legislature can partially return to Boston the democratic principles of home-rule, the absence and handicap of which the city of Boston has suffered so long.

Beer, Limpid and Clear

You Will Have It on April 7, If All Goes Well

Beer is now a certainty, beer with 3.2 of alcohol.

You need not despise such beer, for it is as strong as the Old Pilsner, Pabst and Schlitz that once made Germany and Milwaukee famous.

It is expected that beer, porter, ale, and 3.2 wines and fruit juices will be for sale everywhere, legally, except in states which forbid it, not later than April 7.

Thus ends one very unpleasant foolish period of fanaticism, bootleg whiskey and organized crime.

Czecho-Slovakia, having heard that "beer is coming back," not knowing that it will come back for United States brewers only, will send a beer brewing exhibition to the Chicago Exposition.

The idea will be to show what wonderful beer is made in Czecho-Slovakia.

Somebody ought to tell all Europe, as a matter of friendly decency, that importations of any alcoholic liquors will be forbidden, undoubtedly.

Senator Borah, powerful man from Idaho, doesn't like the idea of "putting all the blame on Congress," or the assumption "that we as a legislative body have failed."

He adds, "the Executive Department is the real point of extravagance in government." If all Congressmen were Borahs, it might be otherwise, but the people feel that the present Congress needed a head, and got it, name, F. D. Roosevelt.

Saving the Marine Corps

Should Be Built Up, Not Destroyed

Colonel James J. Meade, U. S. M. C., a handsome man of fine military carriage, comes to the Boston Evening American and says:—

> "In the name of the commanding officer, and by his instructions, I thank the Boston Evening American, and the other newspapers of Mr. William Randolph Hearst, for the efficient, loyal and patriotic service they have rendered to the United States Marine Corps in this emergency."

It was a pleasure to have co-operated against the senseless scheme which would have wrecked the competent and historic Marine Corps. We had better be building up the Marine Corps instead of lending a favorable ear to that foolish pacifism which would reduce the Corps to the stature of a corporal's guard.

Perhaps it was more than an accident that caused Colonel Meade to be chosen to convey the gratitude of the Marine Corps to the Boston Evening American. The military world knows him as a brave leader who has led Marine detachments on many hazardous expeditions. We of Boston know him as a popular Charlestown boy, who was a familiar figure among us until service called him to distinction in far away arenas.

Words of the Wise Men

Envy is destroyed by true friendship, and coquetry by true love.

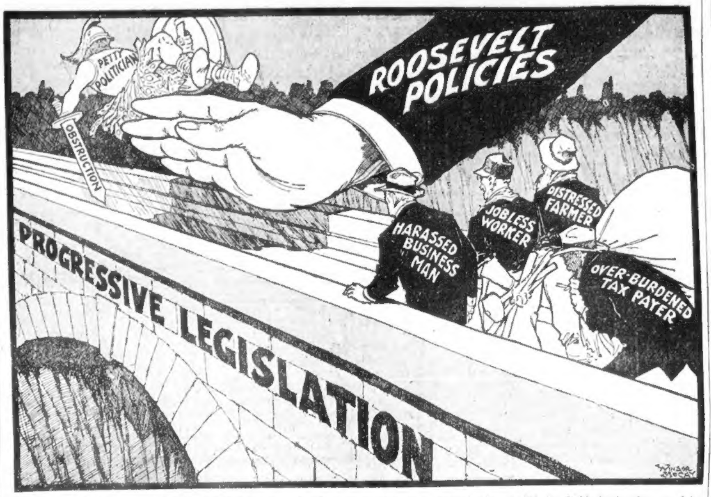
We ought to console ourselves for our faults when we have strength of mind to confess them.

LISTEN, WORLD!—On Magazine Page Today

Horatius



In Livy's history, as poetized by Macaulay, Horatius held back Lars Porsena's army until his outnumbered compatriots could destroy the bridge that led to Rome. Then Horatius, full-armored, leaped into the river and swam safely ashore.

This picture tells what has been happening in Washington instead of Rome.

Hereafter petty politicians should know better than to oppose sound and patriotic legislation.

Welcome Back!

O. O. McIntyre -:- New York Day by Day

Drift to the Cities

NEW YORK, March 22—That sociological worry, "the drift to cities," is a problem that is solving itself. Old established cliff dwellers are in a sudden revolt over the high pressure of a mechanicalized existence. They even seek a cottage further away than out where the pavement ends.

O. O. McIntyre

They want a place large enough to have a cow, chickens a vegetable patch and perhaps a fruit orchard. Suburbans, who reside even in such peaceful havens as the villages of Long Island and New Jersey, are joining the hegira for almost complete isolation.

An ad in a morning paper is typical: "Born New Yorker desires small farm house, without telephone, and as far as possible from any civilizing influence. Modern plumbing not necessary." Economists believe that the next real estate upswing will be for similar rendezvous.

Three close friends — you can imagine how "close" they are by one being Verne Porter—forswore Gibraltars of concrete, for hillside patches, with a lean-to, sick cow, and sour well, in remote sections of Maryland, Connecticut and Pennsylvania. And more are on the way.

* * *

They were talking about the sly humor of writers who tried valiantly to dispel the gloom of the Radio City enterprises. My choice was Weare Holbrook's: "The Music Hall's change in policy occurred right after the opening of the new Roxy which was followed by the opening of Roxy himself at the Post Graduate Hospital."

* * *

Mention of a deaf Boston invariably brings a sheaf of letters from owners of deaf dogs. One, from an Arizona desert shack, reads: "I have a deaf Boston, too. Also, I'm stone deaf. But neither of us worries. The dog doesn't have to listen to my baby talk and I don't have to hear my French cook's alibi for his country's debt-dodging. Deafness, to use an inelegant simile, is like halitosis. It only bothers other people."

* * *

Robert Garland, critic, has two Bostons, born in the metropolis, that never trotted a city sidewalk. He accupies an Horatio st. penthouse which has a terraced plot with tubbed trees and everything, and here the dogs were carried in puppyhood. Outside of the Wendel sister's high-fenced enclosure, on the avenue, for their pets, it is the dandiest place for dogs in all the town.

In one of those baffling colloquies invariably following efforts to get information from hotel clerks, I received a deserved rebuke. Waiting a half-hour on the phone for a reply, I finally shrieked: "Give me the manager!" Connected, I shot off my lip. The manager put the clerk back on the phone and apologetically he explained: "I regret, sir, I was negligent but I had just received word that I am the father of twins and was in a flutter." In a flutter, indeed! I would have been turning cartweels in the lobby or playing horsie astraddle some broad-backed porter.

Prayer for Sea-Faring Men

For all who go to sea in ships
I keep a prayer upon my lips.
God keep them safe and make them brave
And let them master wind and wave.
For ships however great they be

For sailormen whose courses lie
Beyond the edge of sea and sky
Upon my lips a prayer I keep.
God strengthen them upon the deep.
For ships however large they be
Seem puny in a storm at sea.

Wisdom and courage, Lord, I pray,
Bestow on sailors day by day
And grant to all sea-faring men
The joy of getting home again.
For ships however strong they be

A Gold Embargo

By Julius G. Berens

Financial Editor, New York American

The Washington financial oligarchy holds a powerful anti-depression weapon which it seems to be frittering away unknowingly.

By permitting exports to Italy of a portion of the gold which that and other nations have accumulated in the United states, the Administration opens the way for possible transfer of the entire "earmarked" stock of gold, variously estimated into hundreds of millions of dollars.

There are many reasons why a gold embargo AT THIS TIME is advisable for the United States.

France and England are credited with having accumulated the greatest part of the "earmarked" gold.

England has acquired this gold by exchanging for our gold-dollars her own pounds sterling. The latter is wholly a paper currency, which is not currently redeemable in gold.

Therefore, by invoking an indefinite gold embargo, the United States in effect would offer to trade its dollars, without the obligation of gold conversion, for the currencies of other nations.

The whole world is in debt to the United States.

Commercial debts to us probably aggregate fifteen thousand millions of dollars.

The preponderant influence, therefore, would be toward demand for the American dollar, with which the world could repay its debts to the United States.

If the gold standard were operating normally throughout the world, we would in time have a permanent inflow of gold toward these shores.

But England at every opportunity has acquired GOLD IN EXCHANGE FOR HER PAPER MONEY.

Today, OFF the gold standard, the Bank of England has MORE GOLD than when the country was ON the gold standard!

The British payment to us of the December 15 war debt instalment in gold has since proven wholly theatrical; England has GAINED in gold since that payment many millions more than the total involved.

Except for minor amounts, the gold which is "earmarked" in the vaults of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York is held for the account of nations OWING US WAR DEBTS.

France, for example, has refused to pay the December 15 war debts instalment. She has repudiated her debt to the United States.

Yet we have been allowing France to acquire immense amounts of gold which have been taken back to Europe or now are set aside here for French account.

England has intimated she will refuse to pay additional instalments of her debt BECAUSE SHE HASN'T GOT THE NECESSARY GOLD.

The war debts are payable in DOLLARS.

We should allow the whole world to have all the dollars it needs. We will take dollars in payment for their debts to us, commercial or war debts.

The world can have all the dollars it demands or needs. But no gold until currency stabilization has been effected the world over.

Internally, the dollar can be maintained as sound as ever, just so long as the government sticks to the "sound currency" edict of President Roosevelt.

If the dollar temporarily shrinks in value abroad, it would be the biggest "Buy American" slogan that human ingenuity can devise.

And, most important of all, if foreign currencies APPRECIATE in value—which is the same as saying that the dollar has depreciated abroad—what will be the effect on world prices?

If foreign currency depreciation is blamed for the shrinking prices of commodities the world over, isn't it logical then to expect that increasing values for foreign currencies would increase the value of commodities?

Certainly the Administration cannot overlook this merely for the supposed pride which exists in a free and open movement of gold.

We have stopped the free flow of gold internally in the United States.

We have tried to maintain the classic gold standard in the face of world abandonment, virtually, and with what results? An accentuated depression.
